Hearts and groceries

By Stephanie Simon

Last Wednesday night, Linda was in the Heartland Food Warehouse checking out the produce. Linda's friend was there too, checking out the men.

Linda emerged from the warehouse happy with her bags of food. Linda's friend was satisfied with a seven-digit number scrawled on a piece of scrap paper.

Linda's friend had decided to forgo bars and nightclubs in favor of a Purity Supreme Supermarket Singles Night. Like the many other singles present, she hoped to find romance or friendship among boxes of food.

To make the evening successful, Purity Supreme transformed the warehouse into a combination nightclub, party, and alcohol-free bar. From the parking lot to the meat counter, the site was almost unrecognizable as a supermarket.

In the parking lot, singles prepared to join the crowd. Men stepped out of their cars, surveyed the warehouse with feigned nonchalance, straightened their shirt collars and strode resolutely toward the "in" door.

Women ran from their cars to the yellow canopy sheltering the sidewalk, trying to avoid the rain. Most had come with friends; in groups of two and three they grabbed grocery carts and walked tentatively forward giggling nervously.

Inside, a disc jockey played rock music over the P.A. system and sixteen booths offered free food samples. It was a party, not a supermarket.

"These singles nights have been happening all over," says Michael Mahoney, public relations director for Purity Supreme, which owns Heartland Warehouses. "In Los Angeles, no one meets in bars any more — this has taken over. We wanted to make shopping more enjoyable, and we thought this couldn't miss. It didn't."

"It's more fun here than at a nightclub," said Middleboro resident Roger Shanks, who drove for an hour to attend Singles Night. "You meet different people all the time, and everyone's friendly. I have a ball!"

Singles Night, which takes place every other Wednesday at Purity Supreme stores around Massachusetts, usually draws

$9.4 million, in theory

Surplus an illusion

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — It's a case of now you see it, now you don't.

The city has a $9.4 million budget surplus for fiscal 1986, but officials insist this figure is misleading and municipal obligations will reduce it to almost nothing.

Comptroller Lawrence H. Marino recently completed the city's financial statement for fiscal 1986. The statement — including the surplus — was released Friday.

The document shows the city with a $9.4 million theoretical surplus. But it points out $821,000 had to be subtracted to balance the municipal sewer/water account. This leaves a net surplus of $8.5 million.

Since the surplus contains uncollected revenues, the total amount of free, expendable cash the city has is around $6.2 million, according to Chief Budget Officer Stephen Cirillo.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann said necessary expenditures will chop that figure to around $300,000, a small "safety net." Cirillo said he is aware of departmental requests that would cost $785,000 if they were all funded.

The city will "have to make decisions among the requests," he said. "Can they be done? Should they be funded?"

The next step is to submit the free cash figures to the state for certification, according to Kenneth Marchus, director of the bureau of accounts for the state Department of Revenue.

"They can't spend any of that cash until certification," Marchus said.

The surplus has been the target of much local political controversy in the past. Last year, the city had a $7.9 million surplus and a little over $5 million in free cash. Some critics have demanded that Mann return at least a portion of that money to taxpayers.

But last week the mayor said the city needs this year's free cash for municipal building and street repairs, school curriculum improvements, liability insurance and an emergency fund.

From the $6.2 million free, expendable cash amount, the city must pay $3.1 million for its annual capital improvement program to upgrade municipal facilities.

In addition, the city plans to set aside $1 million for its contingency or emergency fund. That fund was a life-saver last year when Hurricane Gloria hit, Mann said.

The September 1985 storm cost the city $1.6 million, and while the state and federal governments agreed to reimburse Newton for around $1 million of that, it took months for the money to roll in. The city is still owed $200,000 for Hurricane Gloria reimbursement, Mann said.

The immediate storm cleanup was funded out of the city's pocket and most work had to be

School Dept. wants $1 million in new equipment

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Aldermen are hoping to schedule a joint meeting of the Finance and Programs and Planning committees for quick action on a $460,615 proposal to purchase computer equipment for the School Department.

The meeting could be held some time during early August. The full Board of Aldermen must approve Mayor Theodore D. Mann's request if the new hardware and software is to be funded out of the city's free cash.

At a recent press conference, Mann announced the request as the first phase of a two-year program that would cost around $912,000.

"I'm making a $1 million commitment to a computer program that is going to make us among the best in the country," he said.

If approved, the equipment will be distributed throughout the school system so all youngsters can take advantage of computer instruction, the mayor said.

"We've been building up to this for a number of years," Mann said. "Our kids are going to have an advantage over all the kids who have graduated here and across the country."

Earlier this month, Programs and Planning members refused to consider the request because it was not referred to them soon enough.

On Monday night, the Finance Committee chose not to act on the matter because Programs and Planning has not yet judged the merits of the computer equipment.

Artwork is included as part payment for Claflin School

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Under a unique arrangement, The Newton Artists Housing Partnership (NAHP) is set to purchase the former Claflin School for $400,000 plus 13 pieces of original artwork worth $50,000.

Last week, Mayor Theodore Mann issued a letter designating NAHP as potential new owners of the building.

But before any final action is taken the Board of Aldermen, which approved the initial designation in November, must decide whether NAHP should be issued a special permit to convert the building to living and working space for 14 area artists.

Mann's letter outlines provisions of a Nov. 21 board order which artists will have to follow. Under the agreement, NAHP will buy the Claflin for $400,000. In addition, each of the 13 artists will produce a piece of artwork for the city — worth a total of $50,000, according to development coordinator Jero Nesson.

Nesson, who is directing the project with a grant from the Massachusetts Council for the Arts and Humanities, says it will cost about $1 million to renovate the building.

"We've been negotiating with the city for more than a year," he says. "After we sign a purchase and sale agreement, we will begin the process of converting the unused schoolhouse into a place where artists can live and work in Newton."

The building, according to NAHP attorney Howard Levine, will be redesigned by architect Lausch Heder. Levine says the renovation work should begin shortly after the board votes on the required special permit. He adds the special permit petition should come before aldermanic Land Use Committee "sometime in September."

Nesson says the units will range in size from 900 to 3,000 sq. ft. A 1000 sq. ft. unit will cost artists $540 per month. Size will determine a unit's cost.

Both Levine and Nesson say there are other provisions to the sale. One stipulation limits the amount of money for which an artist could resell a unit. According to Mann, the limits are intended to discourage making the artists'

Rain delay escalates pre-game rhetoric

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

Sounding tougher than he did last week, Mayor Theodore D. Mann said Boston College "got lucky" when the threat of rain postponed last Thursday's scheduled softball game between city officials and univeristy staff.

Mann (0-0) was scheduled to take the mound against BC President J. Donald Monan, SJ (0-0), in a battle of oldtimers that did not promise to be a pitchers' duel.

Mann accused Monan of appealing to a Higher Authority for the foul weather which postponed last week's game. "I think Father Monan's got a direct line to divine intervention," the mayor said.

This was not the same Mann who last week said he had heard BC was going to bring in ringers — including past athletic greats such as Doug Flutie.

Obviously unnerved by the rumors, he declined to reveal his starting lineup and manager or even to name the umpires chosen for the game.

But now the mayor says it was BC, not the Gardeners, that was spared a drubbing by the weather. The new date means the Newton team will not be able to field one of its best players, who will be on vacation, said Mann, declining to name the Gardeners' star.

Monan could not be reached for comment, but BC manager Dr. Laurence Barton, who doubles as director of the university's Office of Community Affairs, scoffed at Mann's tough talk.

"We think it's fortunate for the city, " Barton said of the postponement. "It's given them a few extra weeks to train their alleged athletes.

"Our understanding is that the mayor's team is far more adept at pinball than softball," Barton added.

He declined to comment on the rumors BC intended to use ringers. He would say only that the team would have some players older than 60 and several younger than 30.

Polishing a dusty, old jewel

Even from the outside, the old, imposing house at 908 Beacon St. looks like one of those Garden City mansions only the extremely wealthy can afford.

But the O'Hern's purchased the property three years ago because it was much more affordable than many of the homes they looked at in other Boston area communities.

And now, after stripping off the exterior siding, painting the house in five different shades of brown, modernizing the kitchen, painting the interior, installing heating, and much, much more, the home's appearance has not only been noticably improved, but the O'Herns' efforts have been cited by the state.

Several months ago, the couple's "untiring enthusiasm and dedication" toward restoring the old home, built circa 1885, won them a Preservation Award from the Massachusetts Historical Society. Nominated by the Newton Historical Commission, the O'Herns are the only home owners to receive the award this year.

"They did a marvelous job of removing the horrid artificial siding on the house," said Margaret Twomey, of the Massachusetts Historical Commission. "We like to recognize" home owners for restoring old homes to their original state.

Luckily, Wayne said, the original facade was still intact. He had uncovered one of Newton's prime examples of the "stick style" Victorian home, popular between 1850 and 1900. The "sticks" are the horizontal and vertical wood planks which decorate the home's exterior.

The interior of the home, however, needed just as much work as the exterior. When they purchased the home, the city said the O'Herns would have to remove the upstairs kitchen that had been used by rooming house tenants.

The elegance of the final product belies the effort that went into it. Lauren McFalls photo

Then, as there was only one radiator for the entire upstairs area, the O'Herns had to install more heating elements.

They painted and cleaned the interior where a thick film of nicotine had yellowed the walls and had obscured the stained glass windows.

The house was "dark and oppressive when we moved in," said Pat.

They refinished all the floors and painted the Hopes for rebirth of old shul

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NONANTUM — The Jewish elders of Agudas Achim synagogue are passing the torch of religious tradition to a group of young families who vow to keep the Orthodox house of worship thriving.

For the past 30 years, the synagogue, built in 1912, has opened its doors for service only on select holidays. But Saturday marked the first time in 30 years that the synagogue was used to celebrate a sabbath. The congregation filled the small intimate shul with prayerful voices.

"When I sat in the womens' balcony Saturday it was reminiscent of my grandparent's shul," Helen Storch says. "It brought back all those good memories and those good warm feelings I used to get. There is a lot of sentimental attachment to the past. You don't have to be Jewish to appreciate the authenticity and beauty of it."

"I consider myself a modern woman, but I feel the separation is in keeping with the traditions of Judaism," she says. "I don't feel it puts me in a subservient role. I prefer the separation."

Storch, along with a small group of women, worked to promote the monthly services they hope eventually will take place every week. The next service is scheduled for Sept. 6 at 9 a.m.

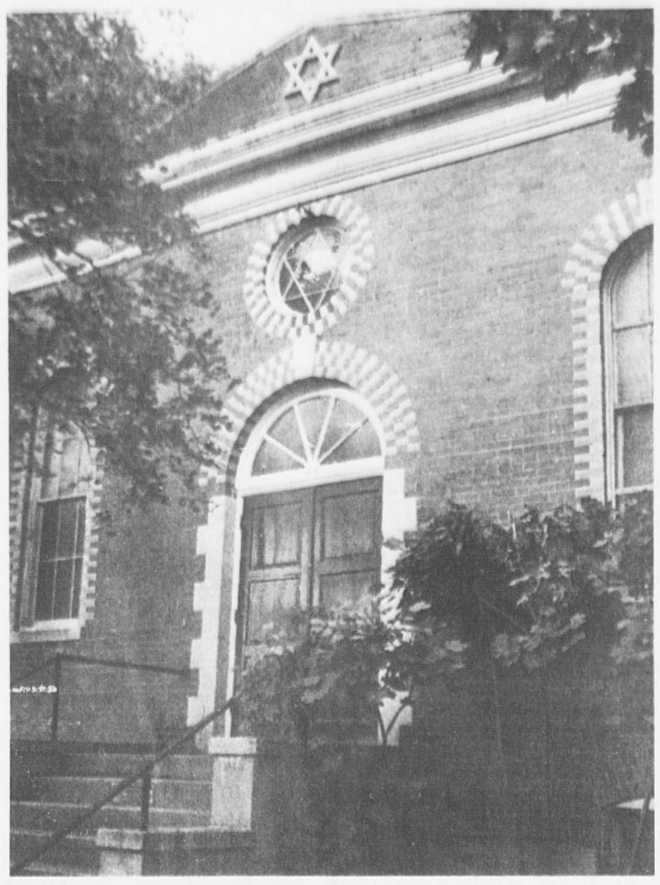

The Orthodox sect of the Jewish faith has always been small, but Newton is seeing a new influx of young Jewish Orthodox families who yearn for a place to celebrate their faith.

Beryl Gilfix, grandaughter of one the synagogue's founders, believes young people are looking for more tradition and structure in their lives — "to get away from the homogenization of religion.

"The Orthodox have always been mindful of preserving the old ways and I think people are looking for a kind of religious purity which this offers," Gilfix says. "The easy way out of not having any rules, laws and standards doesn't appeal anymore."

Gilfix says members of this "young pioneer group" are committing themselves to the area and "the revival of a wonderfully old institution."

The Adams Street synagogue was built 84 years ago as waves of Jewish immigrants made their homes in Nonantum where housing was more affordable than other Newton villages. There was not a synagogue within miles, which made services inaccessible to Orthodox Jews who do not walk or drive long distances on the sabbath or holy days.

'There is a beautiful flavor of old and young joining together which is really what a shul should be.'

Nechama Cheses

At the turn of the century, enough Orthodox families lived within walking distance from one another to form a "minyan," the required quorum of 10 adult males needed to conduct a service. For years they used rented halls and private homes for services until finally in 1912 they found their spiritual home.

The Jackson Homestead has mounted an historical exhibit of photographs, oral history, ritual objects and memorabilia of Newton's oldest existing Jewish congregation that dates back to the 19th century.

"There seems to be a surge of ethnic pride which I think is just terrific," Blustain says. "The Orthodox Jews actually have a wonderful way of life, while it takes great commitment. They seem to know a lot more about where they exist in the universe. There were times when they were forced to assimilate into American society, but they never lost their traditions and ethnic roots."

The children of the founders, all now in their 70's, have been keeping the synagogue going in honor of their parents, Gilfix says. At the same time, they have been struggling to maintain its spiritualism.

But new families also have joined in the synagogue's spiritual renewal.

"Our dream for the shul is that it be used as a vital center of worship where we can also form a strong community," says Nechama Cheses, who recently moved to Newtonville. "We want to get enough people to keep the doors open. You just don't find synagogues as warm and lovely as this one any more."

The group expected it would be very difficult to scrape together enough men to form a "minyan." But the congregation was pleasantly surprised when more than 50 men, women and children came to Saturday's service.

"We're hoping to attract other Jews to come to our services and move into the area to support us," Cheses said. "We have an inter-generational group which is really important in the revitalization of the synagogue. There is a beautiful flavor of old and young joining together which is really what a shul should be."

'Secret' meetings defended

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — There was nothing wrong with the informal discussions he held with some aldermen over the city clerk's contract, board President Michael Malec said last week.

"I think it's reasonable and, indeed, responsible for any alderman from time to time and from issue to issue to seek advice from colleagues," Malec said. "I just don't see what's wrong with that."

He was responding to charges aired by aldermen Richard McGrath and Richard Bullwinkle that he held secret, exclusionary meetings which led to a decision to deny Clerk Edward English a 5 percent raise all other municipal department heads are receiving.

English is an employee of the Board of Aldermen and any discussion of his terms of employment should include all members, they said during an explosive Finance Committee meeting last week. Malec, they said, held sessions with a few select aldermen — most notably committee chairmen — to discuss the issue.

But as a general rule, Malec said he can see nothing wrong with a board president consulting with some aldermen before an issue comes officially to the full board.

"Some people may feel excluded," he said. "I'm sorry about that. I can't ask 23 colleagues on every single issue.

"I don't regard myself as a 'know-it-all' in terms of the political process," Malec added. "I tend to ask for advice."

FinCom Chairman Paul Coletti has said it was his understanding that Malec and English had agreed to a standard of performance document and a 6-month delay in a review for a merit raise.

Coletti said English was to be excluded from the raise because he missed worked early this spring. English was being treated for a medical problem at an out-of-state hospital at the time.

But last week, FinCom voted 3 to 2 to recommend the full board on Aug. 11 grant English the 5 percent raise.

Malec declined to comment on the situation because it is a personnel matter. "How this is going to be resolved is not yet clear in my mind," he said.

McGrath said he and Malec met at city hall late last week to discuss the issue. He termed their discussion a "hopeful sign" both issues — the clerk's pay and allegations that secret meetings were held — can be resolved.

"He seems to be willing to go along," said McGrath of Malec. "Let's put it behind us. Let's give Eddie his raise.

"It seems to me the rift has been addressed and that the wounds could be healing," McGrath added. "The next few weeks are critical."

But Coletti said he wants Malec to stick with the terms he originally worked out with English. "I would be unhappy if Alderman McGrath or anyone was able to change his (Malec's) mind," said Coletti.

McGrath accused Coletti and the other aldermen who met with Malec of engaging in a "conspiracy" against the city clerk.

Coletti responded by saying that, in meeting privately with Malec late in the week, McGrath is guilty of the same charge he has leveled at others.

For his part, Coletti said he and those aldermen who consulted with the board president were not engaging in secret, exclusionary sessions.

"I can show you two letters requesting me to sit down with him and give suggestions relative to the clerk's situation," said Coletti. "I don't do things secretly and under the table."

Last week, he accused McGrath and Bullwinkle of not volunteering their advice when difficulties at the city clerk's office first surfaced.

Bullwinkle, however, denied that allegation and later explained he offered advice to Malec right after the situation developed.

McGrath said he offered the clerk personal support at that time. "Where was I when this happened? I was with Ed English," he said.

Coletti charged the type of help Bullwinkle and McGrath said they offered seems superficial, not the kind of full commitment needed to resolve the problem.

"We were the first group of aldermen to work on this openly," Coletti said. "We didn't try to bury it."

NE Telephone helps CRWA

NEWTON — A few years ago, many people wouldn't have gone swimming in the Charles River even on a dare.

Now, thanks to the dedicated work of the Charles River Watershed Association and support from corporations such as New England Telephone, many stretches of the river's water are once again clean enough for swimming and other water sports.

As part of its continuing commitment to the environment, New England Telephone recently contributed $1,000 to the association to support its river preservation projects.

Iodice plan approved

NEWTONVILLE — After more than nine months of delay, developer Michael Iodice is one step closer to winning final aldermanic approval of his plans for a garage and office building on Crafts Street.

Before the Board of Aldermen votes on last week's Land Use Committee decision favoring Iodice, the Law Department will have to make a ruling on a set of legal opinions presented by Alderman Bruce Carmichael.

The committee voted to approve Iodice's site plans for the garage, to be built in conjunction with an office building at 36 Crafts Street.

That vote, however, did not come without opposition. Carmichael has vowed to continue his fight against the site plan on the grounds that the building moratorium passed earlier this year prohibits such construction.

Carmichael has argued that the moratorium is a dimensional control, which would prohibit Iodice from building the office and garage because the site plan was filed after the moratorium became law.

Iodice has argued that he can build because he filed a perimeter plan, protecting the zoning status of the land for three years, prior to the implementation of the moratorium.

Carmichael introduced a set of legal opinions and case histories that he said prove the moratorium should prohibit Iodice from building.

Murphy Urges Action

Lieutenant governor hopeful Evelyn Murphy is calling on the state Legislature to act on pending hazardous waste clean-up bills before the November referendum on the issue.

"The time for foot-dragging has long since past ... Continued delay can only result in tragedy," she said.

Murphy also called for a detailed discovery program that directs state environmental officials to find dangerous sites in Massachusetts; creates strict timetables to insure clean up and provides adequate funds to accomplish the task.

Shannon's Drug War

Attorney general candidate Jim Shannon is calling for the creation of a special drug unit within the attorney general's office that will target the drug and organized crime networks that distribute illegal drugs.

"I plan to launch a major assault on the fuel lines of the drug trade, the dirty money that finances both the business and the lifestyles of drug traffickers," he said.

The special unit for this "two-front war" would be built on the foundation of Attorney General Francia X. Bellotti's statewide Drug Task Force, Shannon added.

Crime Watch Support

State Rep. candidate Anthony M. Mandile told a recent meeting of residents he supports additional state funding for Crime Watch programs at the municipal level.

Mandile, a former volunteer probation officer pledged his support for the program in front of 35 South Side residents attending a Crime Watch meeting at the Whittemore School.

District attorney candidate Stephen J. McGrail is charging Middlesex County District Attorney Scott Harshbarger with being soft on violent crimes.

"It is up to the district attorney to 'scream bloody murder' when bloody murder is committed in Middlesex County, and Scott Harshbarger has failed to do that," he said.

McGrail said he pledges to prosecute those accused of violent crimes to the fullest extent of the law "even when the TV cameras are not rolling."

Man arrested for cocaine

NEWTON — A Newtonville man was arrested for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute after detectives reportedly apprehended him trying to flush the evidence down the toilet at his home last week.

Arthur J. Cogan, 40, pleaded not guilty in district court and was released on $1,000 cash bail. The case was continued to Aug. 7 for pre-trial conference. The maximum sentence for the felony charge is 10 years imprisonment.

According to the drug investigation unit, Cogan had been under surveillance for approximately a month for his alleged dealings in controlled substances. Detectives Arthur Fryar and Robert Ober spotted Cogan driving his 1981 gray Mazda down Walnut Street at 7 p.m. Tuesday and followed him to what appeared to be an abandoned home at 66 Austin St., where the suspect got out of his car, police said.

The suspect was carrying in his hand a white envelope containing seven grams of cocaine, according to police.

A short distance away detectives got out of their car, identified themselves and told Cogan they wanted to speak with him. Cogan ran up the back stairs of his home, into the bathroom and threw the white envelope into the toilet, according to detectives. Cogan flushed the toilet, but Detective Joseph Donahue stuck his hand inside the toilet and retrieved the envelope, police said.

Donahue told the suspect "That was stupid." Cogan reportedly said, "Wouldn't you have done the same thing?"

When Donahue opened the envelope, police said he found wrapped in plastic "a rock white substance believed to be cocaine." A field test was conducted on the substance by Fryar and it tested positively.

The cocaine has a street value of $700 and Cogan told police he purchased it for $550. Cogan was subsequently arrested and his car was impounded as evidence.

The drug investigation unit has a confidential answering machine set up for citizens to call with tips about drug dealings in their neighborhoods. People with information should call the department at 552-7282.

"We've had a number of good pinches as a result of information citizens have given us," Fryar said. "We will be able to do our jobs a lot better if the community would help us out."

Doctors Say:

New Grapefruit Super Pill 'II' Gives Faster Weight Loss

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.
No Dieting — Eat Normally

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special) — Good news for people who want to lose weight. According to the results of a recent medical study, you can easily lose up to "14 pounds in 14 days" with an amazing, vastly improved "new version" of the world famous grapefruit 'super pill' diet called Super Pill II.

Best of all, the pills allow you to "continue to eat all of your favorite foods without changing your normal eating or exercising habits and still lose weight, starting immediately, until you achieve the ideal weight and figure you desire. "It's guaranteed!"

All Lost up to 14 lbs. in 14 Days

"Remarkably, ALL people in the Super Pill II test group showed dramatic weight loss over 14 days," stated Dr. Steve Sachs, who compiled and analyzed the data in the study. It also proved conclusively that the powerful new ingredients combined with the placebo effect will enable you to lose weight "over 3 times faster" with this new version compared to the previously popular and successful original version.

"Pills Do All the Work"

According to the clinical study, "Super Pill II itself does all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO special exercise, NO hunger pangs, and NO messy fresh half grapefruit to eat at every meal." You simply take the pills with a glass of water before meals.

Pills Contain ALL Daily Vitamins

No need to take any vitamins to maintain your good health and energy because Super Pill II is fortified with all (100%) of the U.S. Government USRDA recommended daily vitamin requirements.

Super Pill II is already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again.

Now Available to Public

'Privatization' and loss of control

Recent discussions of the advantages of "privatizing" city services — as Newton has already done with trash collection, for instance — make us a little uneasy. Basically, the unease stems from the knowlege that, every time you farm out another essential city service to a private firm, you lose a degree of control over the way in which the city is run.

The City of Newton, so often a "lighthouse" community that shows other communities the deep smooth channel through the reefs and rocks spawned by Proposition 2½, has been a pioneer in the area of privatization. Several years ago, a popular national newsweekly did a cover story on the trend toward contracting private firms to deliver city services. The story led off with Newton's efforts to secure a contract for trash collection.

Since then, the city has signed contracts with private firms to run its ambulance service and to paint the lines in the middle of the streets. We are also on the verge of contracting a firm called Datacom to run down parking ticket scofflaws and capture additional, delinquent revenues for the city.

The privatization of some other city functions, including that of the largest municipal legislative body in the commonwealth, the Board of Aldermen, has also been discussed ... seriously and otherwise.

It is difficult to measure exactly what benefits have come to the city as a result of these moves toward privatization. The mayor and other city officials contend we have saved "millions of dollars" by farming out city services.

Whatever the savings, the disadvantages of privatization remain: We have lost some control over the way city is run. And, although there are provisos in the contracts to allow the city to resume delivery of the contracted service if negotiations with private firms break down, the logistics of such a process are intimidating. If the city wanted to go back into the trash collection business, for instance, a transitional period that saw trash piling up on city streets would not be a great surprise.

While we congratulate those city officials who, in their wisdom, negotiated the private contracts we now have, we also urge caution in further sorties into privatization. Some city services lend themselves to private delivery. Others do not, especially those, like police and fire services, that demand absolute accountability.

The thing to be wary of in the course of privatization is expressed in the ancient wisdom, "Who serves controls." While we appreciate the advantage private contracts have given the city in its fight against "slow fiscal strangulation," we also caution our officials that, once they have given over the reins of the city, it is extremely difficult to get them back.

A place for women in service clubs

Current debate over the appropriateness of allowing women into Kiwanis, Lions and other service organizations has led to this "on-the-other-hand" editorial.

A part of the First Amendment freedom to be cherished is that which tells Americans they have a right to choose with whom they prefer to associate. Courts have narrowed this to a degree in civil rights, properly enough, because that brings equal opportunity for all to work, gain education, use public facilities and exercise voting franchise along with traditional religious preference. So far so good.

The courts, all the way to the Supreme Court, have not yet ruled that a men's club cannot exclude women, nor can a woman's club exclude men, for that matter.

If you have a weekly poker game going, presumably, the same applies. An exception under Supreme Court ruling told Jaycees they did have to accept the ladies because the organization engaged in commercial activity and thus was not strictly private. That was in 1984 in Minnesota.

Newton's local chapter anticipated the national organization's decision to break down gender barriers. When it was finally made, our local chapter already boasted a woman as president.

Across the land there are city ordinances requiring civic and fraternal clubs to open membership rosters, presumably open to court challenge. And there are Kiwanis, Rotary and Lions Clubs, which are ignoring charter prohibition of women and risking expulsion.

In this area, the Parkway Kiwanians have voted to admit women into their West Roxbury chapter in defiance of the international dictate. Waltham Lions want to do so, unhappy its international body fell shy of amendment passage by a narrow margin. Newton Kiwanis is soon to test its membership attitude.

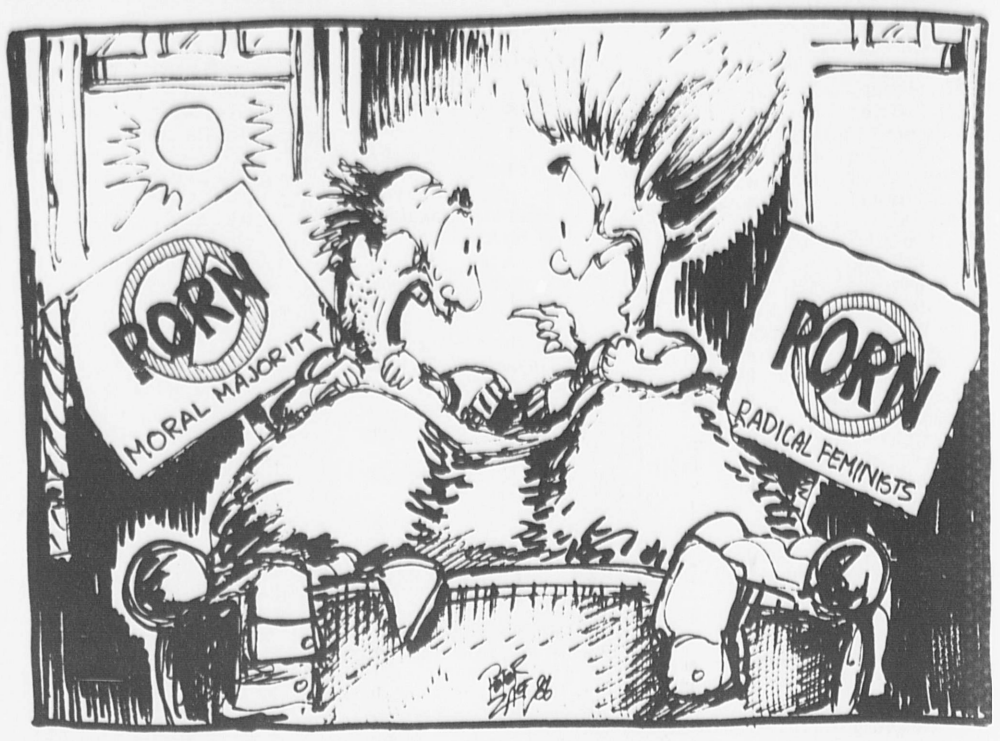

The feminist movement is waging a concerted drive to break down the barriers through government and court decree. Their point has merit. In fact, the Minnesota decision may win the day through this process. Justices there said Minnesota's broad definition of public accommodations "reflects a recognition of the importance ... removing the barriers to economic advancement and political and social interaction that have historically plagued certain disadvantaged groups, including women."

On the other hand, coercive government action should not be the way to haul down the barricades. There are too many clubs or organizations where exclusion on both gender sides gets into privacy prerogatives we believe to be proper. And civic or fraternal clubs differ widely in activity and purpose, so much so that a broadside ruling would create a legal mishmash.

Our judgment is that a continuation of the trend now taking place will ultimately resolve the matter. Majority votes in the three principal service club ruling bodies makes this plain, as do the incidents of defiance. These organizations are structured to bring together those persons advancing themselves in business and professions. Qualified women have much of value to contribute to these groups in community and social causes. Excluding them because of sex does not make much sense.

On the strictly social or recreational side, mutual interests don't fall into the business or political area for the most part. Voluntary participation on an invitational basis is very much in the American tradition and need not be disturbed.

Opening the doors of service clubs through voluntary expansion of membership opportunity to include women with the same qualifications as the male side gets our vote. Doing it on an individual club basis is an avenue to be traveled.

Westfield State and police scandals may affect 'Duke'

By William G. Robinson

While the Legislature has recessed for the summer, events continue to unfold causing many of us to express concern over the past status of at least two matters.

First, is the continuing investigation into the alleged sex scandal at Westfield State College and the resulting $10,000 pay-off to a student. At the moment, the investigation appears to be dead in the water. Governor Dukakis originally appointed Judge Rudolph Pierce to conduct the investigation. Many of us in state government questioned at that time whether Pierce has the neccessary tools, like subpoena power and a staff, to conduct a thorough investigation. From all the information I have gathered, I have concluded that he does not.

Furthermore, I seriously question whether Judge Pierce, who is currently under contract with the MBTA looking into allegations there against employees charged with stealing money, has the time to devote to what should be a full-time investigation.

The scandal-ridden MDC police, which endorsed the candidacy of Governor Michael Dukakis, ran into another snag this week when several of its present and former police officers were indicted on charges of racketeering, conspiracy and perjury in connection with a civil service examination scam that began in 1976 (the first Dukakis term) and continued for eight years (the second Dukakis term).

One of the accused MDC police officers was appointed only last year to head up the 600 officer force. His predecessor retired after being reprimanded for approving an electronic sweep of the State House office of Representative Vincent Piro (D-Sommerville).

The governor's response to this matter was a press release stating that his administration "cannot–and will not–tolerate any betrayal of the public trust in Massachusetts."

In my opinion, that is not a satisfactory response from a governor who has been in office for eight years, during which time many of these problems have been ignored.

But more importantly, a large number of superior officers indicted in the civil service exam scandal worked to secure the MDC police endorsement of Governor Dukakis in his first campaign for governor. They were rewarded with high level appointments in the MDC. And as a result, the MDC Police Department became the governor's police force.

Now, however, the MDC police have a new and competent superintendent to head up their force. The time has come for the governor to take a hands-off approach to the MDC police force and allow them the opportunity to be a first rate police department.

Woodcliff Rd. crossing changes misguided

To the editor:

I am very sorry to hear that a decision has been made by the Department of Public Works to block off the Woodcliff Road crossing at Route 9 even on a temporary basis. This is like killing a fly with a hammer. Apparently little thought was given or research done, since such a procedure will not only seriously penalize all who live south on Route 9, who wish to go north or west, but also expose them to other hazards and travel time on alternate routes. The problem is speed.

The simple solution would be to install a large sign about an eighth of a mile east and west of Woodcliff Road warning of a light ahead and reducing speed to 35 miles per hour. This would assure better cntrol of the vehicle by those approaching and make it easier to slow down from the 50-55 per hour limit which now exists.

Overhead, center of road, lights would also help. These are simple standard procedures that have helped solve similar problems elsewhere.

Most of the people who live in this area are very careful not to enter the intersection on a green light until all traffic on Route 9 is stopped. "Proof of the pudding" is that I have been a resident on Woodcliff Road for 57 years and the records will show very few serious accidents, at the intersection in question, during these many years.

William E. Nast
Newton

Woodcliff Rd. changes are just a beginning

The long-overdue moves by the City of Newton to fix the Woodcliff Rd./Route 9 intersection offer a dismal example of the unwilligness--perhaps the inability–of the city administration to respond to an obvious problem.

This is not a new traffic issue:

- Woodcliff residents have been complaining for years about the danger of the intersection.
- It was the scene of a number of accidents.
- The traffic light was regularly ignored.
- Police enforcement efforts were sporadic and ineffective.

It was, in short, a tragedy waiting to happen.

That tragedy did occur on June 13, when a mother of four was struck and killed at the intersection. Finally, the administration was goaded to action–forced by the public outcry that resulted from this needless death.

On Clark Street, which will bear much of the effect of the closing of Route 9, residents face a situation that is chillingly similar to that of Woodcliff:

- Residents have complained for years about the speed of traffic on the street. It is a narrow, curving street with dozens of children living on it or crossing it to go to school or Crystal Lake.
- It has been the scene of a number of accidents.
- Speed limit postings and other signs have been regularly ignored: traffic studies show that cars frequently barrel down the street at 45 or 55 mph.
- Police enforcement efforts have been sporadic and ineffective.

It is, in short, a tragedy waiting to happen.

How long will the city wait this time?

Mark K. Metzger

'Pooper scoopers,' Brit style

To the editor:

A comment on the great doggie wars in Newton: While in London last month, I was surprised to see how simply they had handled the waste problem. Special areas at the entrances to parks have been installed, framed by the same iron fencing used around the rest of the park.

Unobtrusive signs ask that dog owners "encourage dogs to use these areas," about 15 feet square. One such area, at Kensington Park, is separated from the palace grounds next door only by the standard low iron fencing. I presume that the city sanitation department rakes out the sand periodically, judging by appearances.

Rather than make either side wrong, this response to the problem attempts to meet the needs of both dog owners and park visitors. Londoners have been grappling with the problem a lot longer than we have. Do you suppose we could learn from their experience?

Does thirty really mean the end?

By Sarah Droney McGurrin

The countdown is in effect.

The pedal is to the metal and no amount of brake work can halt the aging process skid. Thirty, better known as the "BIG THREE-0," is careening towards this lady and there's just no place to run ... no place to hide.

Thirty doesn't sound that bad. It doesn't even look that bad. It may in fact not even feel that bad. But the mere anticipation of turning 30 tomorrow is pumping an adrenalin-filled dread throughout my increasingly wary (and weary) bones.

The phobia for turning 30 started in the 60s when the phrase "Never trust anyone over 30," appeared in print and became the calling card for all yippies and hippies. I suppose just the fact that I'm no longer a "yippie" but a "yuppie" is enough to date me.

Anyone who had a life-sized poster of the now 43-year-old Mick Jagger above her bed (much to her father's dismay) is old. Anyone who still thinks Liver Lips is sexy as hell is even older. But Jagger surely is more appealing than one of those new rock n' rollers whose names and music I can never remember.

Maybe the memory cells are going already.

I can hear some of you older types now. How can this sniveling puppy worry about turning 30? Anyone over 50 can, and no doubt will, denounce my fright as folly. But anyone in their late 20s knows this apprehension comes from the gut.

I'm not worried about turning gray and fat overnight — though that chilling vision has appeared frequently in the last few weeks. It's just that becoming old is scary enough without realizing that your college loan is almost paid off.

I never thought I'd live to see that day.

I'm one of those people who could be called childlike in their enjoyment and appreciation of birthdays. I love presents and am vain enough to love being the center of attention. But this b'day leaves me stone cold. I'd much prefer crawling under a rock Wednesday than facing all those old jokes that inevitably will be ballied about.

Who could actually celebrate the slide towards middle age? Especially when you coordinate a staff that averages an apple-cheeked 25 on the youth meter. To the over-30 crowd, job applicants seeking interviews appear as mere adolescents. NBA players on television seem barely out of the cradle.

Youth dies when you turn 30. Not a life-shattering event, true, but a universal phobia nontheless. Vanity plays an enormous part in this. I realize this and plead guilty, but it doesn't make things any easier.

Another problem of turning 30 is what I have dubbed — for lack of a better term — the "fertile faerie" syndrome.

After observing once-childless friends and relatives, I'm sure there is some fertile faerie flying around the universe ready to swoop down upon a woman seconds after she turns 30 and immdiately impregnate her. All the women I know have become "with child" on their thirtieth b'day.

Now that's scary.

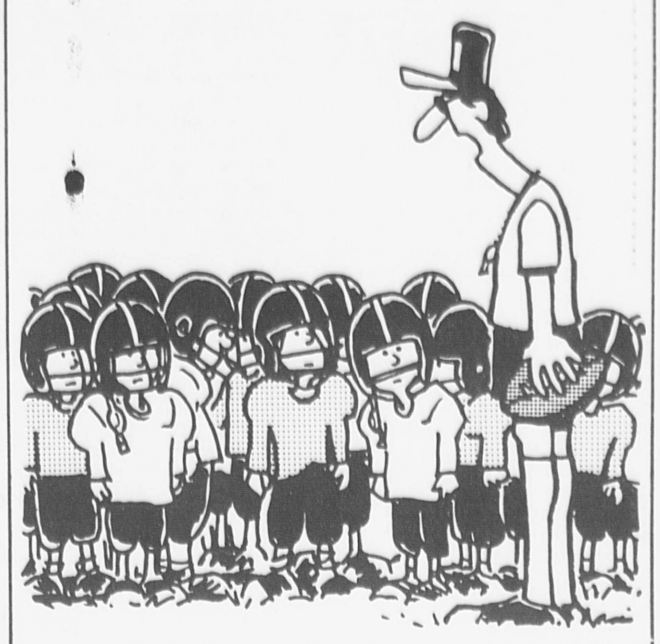

Finally, there's the definition of 30 in newspaper parlance. Know what 30 means at the end of one take of a story? It literally means THE END.

I am definitely not ready for the end, nor do I welcome a visit from the fertile faerie.

That rock is looking awfully good.

"OK — EVERYBODY TO THE DISPENSARY FOR URINE TESTS!"

Local physicians press for ban on nuclear tests

By Dr. Monika Eisenbud

Several Newton residents were among the over 500 physicians from 25 states who converged on the steps of the nation's capitol on earlier this summer to urge an end to nuclear weapons testing and the resumption of superpower negotiations of a comprehensive test-ban.

To dramatize their concern about continued nuclear testing and an accelerating nuclear arms race, the doctors staged a "Code Blue Alert." "Code Blue means human life is at risk and immediate intervention is necessary," said Dr. Jack Geiger, an internist and epidemiologist who is president of the 50,000 member Physicians for Social Responsibility, the group which called the alert.

At the rally, Geiger, who just returned from a visit to Soviet hospitals treating the seriously ill victims of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster, described his reactons to what he saw: "To look at those frightened, suffering patients was to learn once again what the nuclear arms race is really about." He reminded the physicians and onlookers that a nuclear war would be "Chernobyl maginified not a million times but a hundred million times.. a disaster that would threaten not 200 people, not 100,000, but all of the people of the northern hemisphere." As for the role of physicians, Geiger said, "We have a responsibility to see to it that that doesn't happen."

Two Newton physicians were among the rallying protesters, who wore white coats and blue arm bands with the words, "Stop Nuclear Testing." Dr. Monika Eisenbud, a psychiatrist, and Dr. Sidney Alexander, a cardiologist, were motivated to make the trip because of their concern over the escalating nuclear arms race. "At this moment we have an important opportunity for stopping nuclear weapons testing, while the Soviets are continuing to observe their unilateral testing moratorium in the interest of resumed negotiations on a complete ban. We can't afford to miss this opportunity to slow down the nuclear arms race. Without testing, new, destabilizing nuclear weapons systems can't be developed by either side," said Eisenbud. "Negotiations on weapons' reductions, an important next step, would be advanced in a climate of reduced competition."

Many of the physicians met with members of their Congressional delegations while in Washington. Both the Senate and the House of Representatives have passed nuclear test ban resolutions by wide margins. Rep. Barney Frank, meeting with Eisenbud, stated that a joint congressional resolution urging negotiations towards a test ban may soon appear on the President's desk. All indications are that he would veto it.

Many members of congress have expressed support tor a cut-off funding for nuclear testing as a next step if a non-binding resolution does not lead the administration to resume negotiations on this issue. A sign of broad and growing public support for an end of nuclear testing is that more than 150 cities and towns across the country have adopted nuclear test ban resolutions, and funding cut-offs if that is the only way to achieve a ban. Newton is among these cities; its resolution received unanimous aldermanic support.

PSR physicians have encouraged this public groundswell. The group was formed in the early 60's to inform the public about the effect of atmospheric nuclear testing. At that time, physicans and dentists demonstrated that mother's milk and babies teeth were being contaminated with radioactive Strontium 90, form radioactive fallout. This disturbing finding helped create the climate in which the 1963 atmospheric test ban treaty was negotiated. Since that time, all administrations except the present have supported a comprehensive test ban and have entered negotioations on this issue.

"What's at stake now is the lives of our children and their children, not just milk and teeth."

Both the president and congressional delegations have been deluged with prescription forms isgned by hundreds of doctors, prescribing: "Stop nuclear testing for survival." The physicians say they are practicing the ultimate in preventive medicine by urging a nuclear test ban. They note that they would be uanble to offer meaningful medical intervention in the unimaginable aftermath of a nuclear war and urge: governments to "prevent what we cannot cure."

Dentists who make house calls

> 'I worry that this will become a yuppie thing of the 80's, like having a hairdresser come to your house!'
> Dr. Philip Marcus

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

AUBURNDALE— Nothing in the room is white.

There is no white coat, no white bib, no plastic-covered white chair. There are no bright white fluorescent bulbs, no pictures of white teeth on the wall, no white trays holding gleaming silver instruments. There are no white-faced patients trembling in dread as they await their turn.

Instead, there is eighty-three year old Mary Quinn, smiling as she relaxes in her comfortable green armchair. There is Ann Booth, clad in a khaki jumpsuit, unpacking a brown box. There is Dr. Philip Marcus, wearing a royal blue shirt and black pants, searching for surgical gloves.

This most certainly is not a dentist's office. Yet, despite the absence of white, the lack of an x-ray machine, and the unconventional home setting, Marcus is doing dental work for his patient. He is making impressions for Quinn's new set of dentures — in Quinn's home.

Quinn is one of approximately 75 patients, most of them senior citizens, who take advantage of a unique home care service. For 1½ years, Marcus and Booth have been travelling to homebound patients each Saturday to provide dental care in the home.

"We can do anything from fillings to extractions to dentures," says Marcus. "We do whatever is necessary. Sometimes we have to find a way to get the patients in to the clinic, or, if that's impossible, we have to rent a truck and take a portable x-ray machine. It can get really elaborate!"

"We pack up the office every Saturday morning," says Booth as she unloads some equipment from a large cardboard box. Both she and Marcus are affiliated with the Tufts Geriatrics Department and the Sterns Dental Clinic for the elderly.

Marcus and Booth started the homebound program in November, 1985, when they heard about a boy with an iron lung who had been seeking dental care for more than four years. They visited the boy, their first homebound patient, and then the program began to blossom.

"We found that there was a need for people to be seen in their homes," explains Booth. "So we started a mobile unit."

At first, the duo saw patients only in the suburban area. Now, a "typical" six-patient Saturday involves trips to Newton, Bedford, Cambridge, and Malden, with the first patient scheduled for 8:45 a.m.

Marcus and Booth charge $50 for every home visit; prices for individual treatment are added to this fee. "In an office, you can see 15-20 patients a day. Going from house to house we can only see six," says Marcus, explaining the high home-care fee. Medicaid will cover most treatment fees, but not the $50 base charge for mobile service.

"It's really hard to tell homebound patients that we can't see them if they can't pay the $50 service fee. Some of them manage to get together the money, and then we try to do as much work as possible in one visit," says Booth.

Another concern is patients who request home service although they are able to travel to the clinic. "While our treatment is as good as it can be in a home, it would be more ideal in an office with the chair, the lighting, and the equipment," says Marcus. These patients also take up time which could be used to treat the truly homebound.

"When we say homebound, we mean someone who really can't get out. We're talking about people who can't even get down their front steps," says Marcus.

"I worry that this will become a yuppie thing of the 80's, like having a hairdresser come to your house!" he adds.

Both Marcus and Booth stress that their service is not just for emergencies, but for regular checkups as well.

"A lot of people who are homebound and have no immediate medical problems don't rely on their physicians," says Marcus. "Sometimes we can spot things through an oral checkup. And it really makes people feel a lot more comfortable to get their teeth cleaned," he adds.

The atmosphere in Quinn's home last Saturday was decidedly different from that usually found in a dentist's office. Between denture fittings, Quinn worried out loud about one of her plants, which had suddenly wilted.

"I think you should let the rainwater flush it out," counselled Marcus as he pulled on his surgical gloves. Later, he examined the plant and repeated his advice.

The conversation then turned from plants to Marcus's dog Cleo, who often accompanies the dentist on house calls. "Everyone loves him," said Marcus. "Especially in the nursing homes where he's allowed to come in."

Laughter dominated the 1½ hour dental session, but despite the low-key atmosphere, Marcus got the impressions necessary to make new dentures.

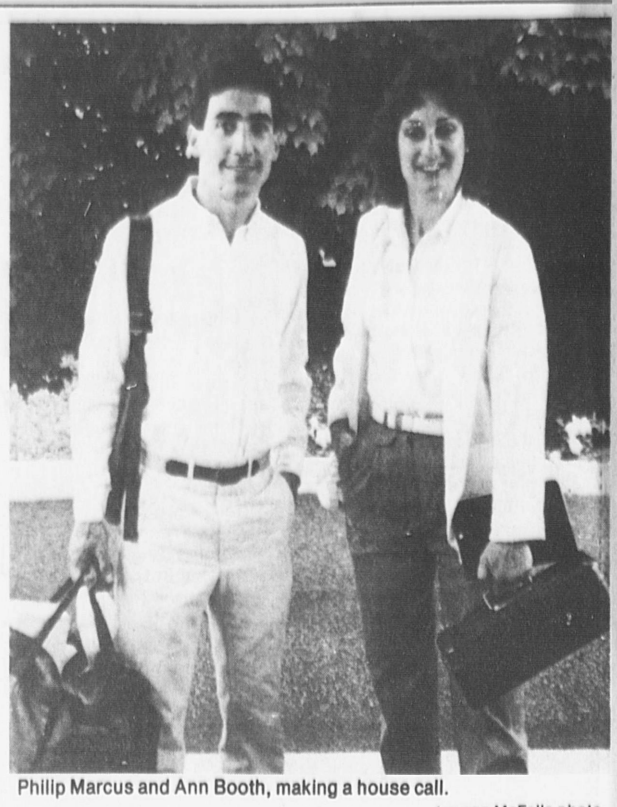

"They're both swell," said Quinn, pointing to Marcus and Booth. "And Cleo too. They're very considerate and very, very nice. We all get along famously." Quinn has been homebound for four years; she heard about the home care service several months ago from her nurse.

"We really enjoy this," says Marcus, "and we have fun doing it. Our patients keep us laughing."

As for the future, the duo plans to continue their homebound program for a long time. Eventually, Marcus envisions a registry of dentists who will be willing to visit patients at their homes and give check-ups. Then, he says, a few dentists could purchase portable equipment and make follow-up calls to those who need further care.

"If the demand is there, I'm sure home care is going to blossom," he says.

For further information about the home-care service, contact Ann Booth at 423-9291.

School Supt. John Strand told Finance members he would like the full board to approve money for computers in September so they can be purchased and installed by November.

This would allow time for teachers to familiarize themselves with the equipment before beginning student instruction in the second semester, said Larwrence Annett, assistant superintendent for curriculum and instruction.

Under questioning from Finance Committee members, Strand said he did not submit the proposal this spring because Mann and school officials already were embroiled in a funding disagreement. Mann wanted to cut $1.2 million from the department's fiscal 1987 budget.

"It really wasn't appropriate to introduce the matter before our budget resolution," he said.

The department has outlined its plans for the additional computer hardware and software in a report summarizing two years of study by more than 100 staff members.

The report says the schools plan to utilize the equipment to improve course instruction, promote logical thinking skills and teach youngsters to use the computer as a learning tool.

In kindergarten through grade six, the schools would stress "basic computer readiness." Elementary students would learn the parts and functions of the computer, gain ability to operate the equipment and be exposed to different types of software.

Under the "computer assisted instruction" part of the program, teachers would use the new software to aid students in mastering existing curriculum from kindergarten to grade 12.

Students in grades four through 12 would be taught to use existing programs for problem solving and to write their own basic programs.

Typing skills and word processing would be stressed in grades nine through 12. The equipment also may be used to improve writing skills from grades six through 12.

The computers also would augment business subjects such as accounting and vocational training and automotive performance analysis.

In addition, such diverse courses as art, music and physical education would employ computer instruction. Youngsters with learning disadvantages also would benefit, the report says.

The city's 15 elementary schools would each add 12 computer systems at a cost of $324,000 over the two years, while the two junior highs would each receive 25 Apple II computers for $140,000. The program would add around 30 computers to the two senior highs as well as word processing and writing laboratories for $448,000.

In each case, the expense includes the cost of printers, software and related equipment.

Art to pay for school cooperative a lucrative income property.

In addition, the NAHP will provide three low-income housing units on-site, to be turned over to the city upon completion of the renovation.

Nesson says the artists will put up 10 percent of the purchase price as a down payment. He says the group must procure a mortgage for the remaining $1 million, a combination of purchase, renovation and tax costs.

Mutual Bank of Newton, according to Nesson, may write the mortgage if NAHP puts the building up as collateral. Rusty Cowper, a commercial loan underwriter for Mutual Bank, said groups like NAHP have some advantages over commercial developers.

Mutual, according to Cowper, also financed Boston's Fort Point artists housing project designed by Nesson. Because they will purchase the Claflin for "considerably below market rate," Cowper said the NAHP is a potentially good investment.

In addition, Cowper said Newton's high real estate values "make it easier to offer a mortgage on any building offered as collateral."

Blasting has resumed

CHESTNUT HILL — Limited work has resumed at the Rte. 9 construction site that was the scene of a July 15 blasting mishap. The force of the explosion injured 14 and sent rocks and debris hurtling through the air.

The lifting of a stop-work order issued by the city after the accident will allow Beaver Construction to perform limited safety and maintenance operations. According to Assistant City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce, only the limited work will continue until the city receives a report from the state Fire Marshal's office.

That report, a synopsis of the Fire Marshal's investigation into the cause of the accident and recommendations for future operations at the site, was not turned over to the city as of last Friday afternoon.

While state and city officials investigate this latest incident, some area residents are upset because the city allowed the blasting to continue despite an earlier blasting accident that knocked out windows at Mulhern's Sunoco across Rte. 9.

That accident, which occured Feb. 24, was the subject of a letter to the Newton Graphic from Chestnut Hill resident George Roberts. In that letter, Roberts criticised city officials for allowing the blasting to continue.

Fire Chief Edward Reilly, who is in charge of all blasting in the city, says that incident was fully investigated and that both the state and city concluded no safety risk would result from continued blasting.

"They changed their method of blasting after that incident," Reilly says of Maine Drilling and Blasting, the company responsible for blasting at the Rte. 9 site. "They placed a buffer between the blasting and the face. It was agreeable to them and the Fire Marshal."

Reilly adds because the elevation of the blasting area was 30 feet higher in February, the chances of some debris leaving the site were greater.

Pre-game rhetoric escalates

Another dark cloud of suspicion is looming over the BC squad. A source late last week revealed that BC law professor Zigmund Plater will play centerfield, raising the spectre of a conflict of interest.

Plater is a Garden City resident and taxpayer, as well as a member of the Newton Conservators.

The attorney could not be reached for comment.

City's surplus is already allocated completed by the winter, Mann said.

"We only had three months to take care of thousands of trees and three hundred miles of roads," the mayor said. "If we didn't have the money, we would have had to cut services."

From the remainder of free cash, the city has to set aside $500,000 to insure itself against liability suits, Mann said.

Finally, the city is facing well over $1 million in requests now being considered by the Board of Aldermen. They include $660,000 to fix Newton North High School's roof and $460,000 to expand computer instruction in the schools.

about 2,000 people.

To promote mingling, the company devised a matching game. Each person receives half a heart (the Purity Supreme logo) with part of a well-known line written on it. There are six different lines, ranging from "What's your sign" to "Haven't I seen you before" to "This could be the start of something big." The object is to find the people who complete your sentence.

Once a couple finds that they "match," they go to the front of the store to register for a drawing. The grand prize is a trip for two to Disneyland, sponsored by America's International Travel Club.

Shanks has been to two Singles Nights, and he "comes prepared" with an excuse to approach everyone — he has all the singles lines stashed in his wallet so he can "match" anyone he chooses.

The consensus among singles at the Watertown warehouse on Wednesday was that they came for a good time — and they were getting it.

Diane Hennessey of West Roxbury came to "look for some handsome men." By 8:30, she hadn't found any, but planned on staying until closing time — 11 p.m. — anyway. "I like anything that's fun," she said, "and I'm having a great time."

Like Shanks, many singles traveled long distances on the chance that they might find Mr. or Mrs. Right in the supermarket.

Elicia drove an hour from her hometown of Leominster. "I haven't seen anyone I'm interested yet," she said after an hour on the man-hunt. "But I'm going to go through the whole store. Maybe Prince Charming will come along."

Several serious shoppers stumbled on Singles Night when they were trying to replenish their pantries. The only aisle not full of singles was the one stocked with baby diapers.

"It's too crowded to shop," complained a Roslindale resident who came with her family. "I didn't know it was Singles Night when I came here."

Other shoppers were more tolerant, as they enjoyed the free samples distributed throughout the store. There was a variety of food available, from Fenway Franks to imported chocolate to ice cream in miniature cones.

"The free food is great," said Lillian Walsh of Waltham, who shopped first, put her groceries in the car, and then returned to the party to meet people and snack.

"It's a lot of fun — it really is," remarked Judy, a Quincy resident. "It's different from the bar scene. Here you get to shop, meet people, and eat free food."

Although the supermarket setting "takes getting used to," in the mind of Boston resident Denise Monroe, many singles said that they prefered it to a bar or nightclub.

"Everybody's smiling," said Ted Hartley of West Roxbury. "And you can see everybody in these lights — it's not dark like in a bar. Also, everybody thinks he's doing something foolish, which makes it fun."

"It's a non-threatening environment," agreed Bill of Burlington. "You can look around and it's easy to approach someone if you want to."

Dick Syatt, who writes a singles column for The Boston Herald and hosts a WRKO talk show, said that a supermarket Singles Night was "the best way to meet people."

"At a nightclub, if you're not a great dancer, you feel out of place," he explained. "But everyone knows how to shop. If you go to a bar or a nightclub and you don't meet anyone you feel like a loser because you paid to get in and you bought drinks. Here, if you don't meet anyone you can still get your groceries!"

Purity Supreme has yet to receive news of any Singles Night couples who are now engaged, but Mahoney has not ruled out that possibility. As he says, "Maybe next spring we'll be holding a wedding down aisle 3!"

Award to welfare office

NEWTON — The Brookline/Newton Welfare office has received the Department of Public Welfare's Child Support Award for its efforts to collect support payments on behalf of 150,000 children on welfare in the commonwealth.

This year, the Department of Public Welfare collected a record $50 million in child support payments. The child support enforcement staff of the Brookline/Newton office collected more than their goal of $550,000 in child support.

"More than 90-percent of the families on welfare in Massachusetts are on welfare because one parent – usually the father – does not pay child support," said Charles M. Atkins, commissioner of the Department of Public Welfare.

"The child support enforcement staff of the Brookline/Newton office has done an outstanding job of collecting support payments and I am extremely pleased and proud of their work. Not only have they saved tax dollars, they have helped ourmost vulnerable citizens–the children on welfare in this state," the commissioner concluded.

Child support enforcement workers increased the amount of collections by automatically deducting payments from absent parents paychecks, intercepting approximately $2 million in federal and state income tax refunds, more vigous enforcment of voluntary support orders, better coordination with the district and probate courts and the use of collection agencies.

The child support staff of the Brookline/Newton welfare office received the award from Atkins at a special ceremony on June 18 in Provincetown at the 50th annual welfare conference.

Once a Vietnam vet, always a women's rights advocate

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — Nothing on the walls of Leslie Feldstein's Walnut Street home indicates she lived in Vietnam for a year. Instead, her experiences as an army nurse in the war are permanently etched in her mind.

One reason for the lack of display is that she only started thinking consciously about it in 1984, 13 years after her Vietnam stay.

Over the past two years, though, she has done a lot of thinking. Now she is a national board member on the Vietnam Veterans of America, and is active on the Vietnam Women's Memorial Project and on the state advisory board for women veterans.

She devotes her time to making sure other women veterans get the benefits they deserve from the armed forces and to fighting against governmental actions that may lead to wars like Vietnam.

Between 8,000 and 10,000 women served in Vietnam, she said. Most of them were nurses.

"Women were exposed to a lot more things than anybody might think," said Feldstein, a former nurse in an evacuation hospital in Chu Lai, "People came in with legs blown off, arms blown off" and the hospital was sometimes hit by rockets.

"What's true for men is true for women," she said about women's reactions to the war. "You develop whatever defenses it takes to get through it," she said. Numbness, for instance, is one result.

"This is part of the delayed stress reaction," she said. Like men, women also have post traumatic stress. Symptoms include feeling isolated, having difficulties forming relationships and difficulties with authority.

To help women cope with these problems, a support group was formed by Sheila Spicer of the veterans center in Boston.

And, like men, women were subjected to Agent Orange, a pesticide used by the United States in Vietnam to kill foliage. According to Feldstein, no studies on the effects of the poison included women. "They say they can't get enough women to do the study," Feldstein said.

"Women weren't even formally recognized at the beginning, as far as veterans benefits go," she said. In the past, for example, veterans hospitals were set up for men, she said. "There should be facilities for women."

Women veterans are also eligible for GI loans, home loans. and educational and medical benefits, she said. "Women take advantage of these benefits at a much lower rate . . . There seems to be a large number of women who don't know what's available."

To ensure women are recognized for their involvement in the war, Feldstein is working on the Vietnam Women's Memorial Project to erect a seven-foot-tall bronze statue of a female soldier next to the "Wall" and the "Three Fighting Men" on the grounds of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C.

But before it can be built, the group needs to raise $1.2 million dollars, and is soliciting for donations. Senators Edward Kennedy and John Kerry are sponsoring a fundraiser for the project in September in Washington.

Beyond her Vietnam-related activities, Feldstein has taken up an interest in Central America. Last September she testified to congress on her impressions of the region following a 10-day fact-finding trip to El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua with 11 other Vietnam veterans.

"When I went to Vietnam I understood almost nothing of the politics or history of that region," her testimony reads. "It took me 15 years to learn the facts of Vietnam and why it was all so wrong to us. I went to Central America to get a sense of that region and what my government was doing there . . . And I was struck with the same sense of sorrow and absurdity of the situation."

Leslie Feldstein

Life in an evacuation hospital

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — She thought serving in Vietnam would be an invaluable lesson.

"I went," says Leslie Feldstein, "because I wanted to see what it was like."

Feldstein was 24 in 1970-71 when she served as a nurse in Vietnam with the United States Army. She wore fatigues and boots every day to work in an evacuation hospital — "the first place people were taken after being wounded in the field."

She worked 12-hour shifts, six days a week. "Casualties came in spurts," she says. Her job involved placing young men in body bags and nursing soldiers back to health who had come in with their arms or legs blown off.

Also in the hospital were rats — "I thought they were cats" — and "really big bugs," she says.

Sometimes the quanset hut hospital was hit by rockets intended for the military base down the road. One woman died in a rocket attack at the hospital, Felstein says.

Outside the hospital, she saw Vietnamese. "What they were interested in was getting their little stuff to grow and going to market," she says.

"There was no reason, no structure to what we were doing. It wasn't like going, 'A.B.C. and who was the enemy.'"

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY
COLORED GEMSTONES
There are more than 3,000 minerals found on Earth. It is only a small percentage that qualify as gemstones. Diamonds, emeralds, rubies and sapphires are referred to as "precious" gemstones. It is because they exhibit a phenomenal degree of rarity, beauty and color. Other minerals are categorized as "gemstones" because they embody, in varying degrees, these same three qualities. In fact, this second category of gemstones often can command higher prices than lesser-quality "precious" stones. For example, high-quality jade and opal can be more valuable than some diamonds or emeralds. Included among the second tier of gemstones are agate, aquamarine, citrine, garnet, jade, jet, lapis lazuli, opal, spinel, topaz, and turquoise. Each has a particular charm, color and identity.
Unlike coordinating your clothes, gem stones go well with one another no matter what the color. So have fun developing a new and interesting combination of stones by coming in to CAROL "THE GOLD LADY". Our display cases show an extensive array of beautiful gem stones in a varied assortment of jewelry pieces. However if you don't see something to please your sense of color, then let us design a piece with the gems of your choice. We're here to please Tues., Wed., Sat., 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9 at 109 Dalby St., Newton, Tel. 332-5935.

City to receive 5 condos thanks to ordinance

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Five units at Hampton Place, a 99-unit condominium complex on Route 9, will be given to the city as low-income housing at no cost, according to a representative of Hampton developer Jeffrey Kosow.

The units are part of an agreement Kosow reached with the city to provide a total of nine units, said Howard Levine, the developer's attorney. The units comply with the 10 Percent housing ordinance and should be handed over to the city soon.

Kosow already has provided four units located off-site.

"This project is very large and I recommended that there should be a significant public benefit included in order to get it through the Board of Aldermen," Levine said. "I don't know if it would have been approved without it."

After negotiating with city officials, Levine said Kosow agreed to provide the units at no cost. Developers contributing units to the 10 Percent housing pool usually receive some kind of payment.

The on-site units are worth between $290,000 and $310,000 on the open market, Levine said.

"These units, which the developer built exclusively for low-income housing, are worth about $1 million," he said. "They are two- and three-bedroom units located in Ward 8."

Levine added that the city paid "between $55,000 and $65,000 apiece" for the units.

Developers, according to Levine, should contribute to the low-income housing stock.

"If the ordinance exists, then it follows that any developer coming into this city has to take contributions to the 10 Percent ordinance as part of the cost of doing business."

He cautioned, however, that the ordinance should consistently outline what those contributions should be.

"The problem comes in sometimes when a developer doesn't know how the ordinance will be applied," he said. "In those cases, a developer can't figure out how much it will cost to make a contribution so it is harder to figure out the bottom line."

Before the units are handed over, city officials are awaiting final authorization from the state, according to Planning Director Barry Canner. Levine said the units have been available "for quite some time."

Kosow received a permit to build Hampton Place in December, 1981.

oak and mahogany paneling and trim in the foyer, living and family rooms. The carved wood fireplaces were cleaned up as well.

It took them two weeks to remove linoleum tiles and tar from the kitchen, uncovering a hardwood floor, and two days for two men and three high school students to scrub off old calcimine from the living room ceiling.

To patch up the living room wall, Wayne put his innovative mind to work to come up with a kitty litter/paint mixture that matched the original paint's consistency.

Yet despite, their attention to all these details, the O'Hern's, the Newton Historical Commission and the Massachusetts Historical Commission still managed to overlook the most important one. To be eligible for a Preservation Award, the project must be completed.

The O'Herns still have exterior siding to remove in the rear of the home and a bathroom to rebuild.

But, according to Wayne, "In a house like this, its a matter of definition when it's finished . . . It's a matter of catching up on the siding, the heating system, the roof.

"And when you finally do catch up, something collapses," he said.

Last Saturday, the O'Herns' sewer pipe collapsed and they had to spend the night in a hotel.

Recalling these and other inconveniences, like the "noise and dirt" involved in restoring the old home, Pat said "this is the first and last time we'll do it on this scale."

Dianna McCarthy of Newton North High School was named to the Boston Globe All-Scholastic girls' tennis team. McCarthy (right) accepts her award from Larry, Globe high school sports editor. Dianna was undefeated in the Suburban League and won the North Sectional title. She was seeded third in the New England 16-and-under division.

Volleyballers shine in California

You can never tell where the stars might come from. In fact, four of them are right in your own backyard.

Meet Laura Slamin, Jody Rogers, Maria Machado and Christine Sullivan, the four Newton North volleyball players who participated in the United States Junior Olympic Volleyball Championships held June 28-July 3 at the University of California in Davis.

The Tiger foursome was selected to play on the Massachusetts Patriots Elite Volleyball Team, comprised of all-star players throughout the state.

The team went to the first round of the quarterfinals, which is quite an accomplishment considering volleyball isn't exactly the most talked about sport in the New England area.

In all, 190 teams competed in the best-of-three tourney.

The Patriots opened up with victories over Orange County (15-4, 10-15, 15-8), Davis Juniors (15-7, 15-9) and Santa Barbara (16-14, 15-7).

On the second day, they drubbed the Spokane Juniors (15-6, 15-12), Central California (17-15, 15-5) and Southern Arizona (15-12, 11-15, 15-12).

Day three featured wins over San Gabriel (16-14, 10-15, 15-7) and Cal Jrs. (15-13, 10-15, 16-14) and a loss to Santa Cruz (10-15, 13-15).

Perhaps Cal Jrs. was the best match of the tournament, as Rogers spiked from the back court, something the opposition was not ready for.

Also, practically every spike by Cal Jrs.' six-foot middle hitters were blocked to the floor by Slamin.

Massachusetts' offensive success can be attributed to the excellent setting by Sullivan and the blinding serves of Machado, who had several aces.

The Patriots effort was so outstanding that it had the Cal Jrs.' coach saying, "Where did these Massachusetts Patriots come from?"

Newton volleyball stars: (L-R) Christine Sullivan, Jody Rogers, Maria Machado and Laura Slamin.

The four Newton girls, along with the rest of the squad, were selected as ball girls for the Mens' Olympic Gold Medalist exhibition game to be held in the fall at the Worcester Centrum.

Laura Slamin- A sophomore, Slamin is a hitter/blocker and an alternate setter. At 5-11, she is very effective in the front row. Laura has been on the Newton North varsity team since her freshman year, and is the assistant coach of the North boys'volleyball team.

Jody Rogers- A freshman, Rogers is an outstanding server who plays the middle back defensive position. The powerful player spikes from the middle back spot and is perhaps the best defensive player on the team. Along with playing varsity volleyball at Newton North, Jody also took part in varsity basketball and varsity softball.

Maria Machado- Machado has an outstanding vertical jump and is an outside hitter, who plays defense in the left back position. By mid-season, Maria was promoted to the varsity squad at Newton North.

Christine Sullivan- A Surburban League All-Star, Sullivan is the team's best setter. She plays defense in the right back position and is a right front hitter. Christine's ability to set the ball to the target player was significant in the teams' capture of the first place trophy at the Nassau County, Long Island New York Championship in May.

Troubadour snares 1st as Levine slugs

NEWTON — A Judd Levine bases-clearing double keyed a five-run fourth inning Friday as Troubadour Club axed Boys' Club, 9-4, to clinch first place in the Newton International League's Murphy Division for the third time in as many years.

The two-time defending Troubadour gang was to have played fourth-place Albemarle Club in a best-of-three quarterfinal round playoff series.

Levine carried the champions for five innings, as he added an RBI-single in the fifth inning in addition to his timely double in the third.

Given the 5-0 lead, righthander Derek Fergus battled with control after breezing through three innings. He walked six batters in a row in the top of the fourth as Boys' Club crossed four runs without the benefit of a hit.

Fergus settled down, and the 14-year-old righty ended the game with seven strikeouts.

Saturday, having just clinched the top spot in the Murphy Division, Troubadour relaxed and caught Steve Leonard hot. Leonard, a Post 440 righty, carried a no-hitter into the fifth inning before allowing five hits over the final three frames, holding on barely for a 6-4 victory over Troubadour Club.

Post 440 finished first in the Copp Division and will host Carson Post at Cabot Park tonight (5:30 p.m.) in game one of a best-of-three series.

Leonard fanned two with the bases loaded in the first inning, then settled down to knock his opponents out, 1-2-3, in the second. He breezed for two more innings before losing-pitcher Peter Hinterregger dented the righthander for the first hit, a one-out single.

Leonard lost a 4-0 lead following a three-run Troubadour sixth that tied the game, but Post 440 rallied to take the lead back in the bottom of the sixth.

An RBI-double by P.J. Melanson put Post 440 in the lead, and Chris Saris scored an insurance marker on an error.

Evo Rufo keyed a three-run first inning for Post 440 with a two-run triple, and Brandon Hehir had an RBI-single in the third for a 4-0 lead.

Levine doubled following Hinterregger's single in the fifth to break the ice for Troubadour. Consecutive RBI-singles by Hinterregger, Guzzi, and Levine tied the score.

Friday, the Post 440 beat Abruzzi, 15-4, behind the slugging of Nino Trementozi and Leonard.

Leonard plated five runs thanks to a solo homer, a two-run triple, and a pair of two-run singles. Trementozi added a solo homer and an RBI-triple to help the Post 440 cause.

Oak Hill splits

Friday, Oak Hill clinched second place in the Murphy Division with a 4-3 victory over the Auburndale Warriors. The Cubs will face third-place Auburndale tonight at Newton South (5:30 p.m.) in the opening game of their best-of-three series.

John Spagnuolo pitched for the win, his first of the year, as he allowed three unearned runs in the game. In fact, errors played a significant factor in the outcome.

All three of Aburndale's runs came as a result of errors, and two of Oak Hill's runs were unearned.

Oak Hill took a 1-0 lead in the second when Spagnuolo scored on a Bert Santucci RBI-single, and the Cubs made it 3-0 in the third compliments of a Harley Malter two-run single.

Brian White scored in the sixth on an infield error. After singling and stealing second, White came home when Sean Spicer's hard-hit grounder was stopped in the infield, but overthrown at first base.

For Auburndale, Hayes had two hits while Adam Cedrone and John Salemme shared the duties on the mound.

Saturday, Oak Hill dropped a 14-9 decision to the still-hungry Boys' Club, which wrapped up second place in the Copp Division with the victory. Boys' Club will host C&K Components tonight at Newton North's Ferguson Field (5:30) in game one of their series.

George Maxcey blasted a two-run single to spark a fifth-inning rally that brought Boys' Club from behind. Trailing, 7-5, the Club scored seven runs to take the lead.

Joe DeNucci carried a heavy bat for Boys' Club, connecting for two doubles and two RBI. Mike Connell had a two-run single and John Caruso added a double for Boys' Club.

For Oak Hill, Scott Devore batted 3-for-5 and Spicer hit 3-for-3.

4 area players lacrosse all-stars picks

Three Newton South players and one Waltham sticker were selected to the Division 2 South All-Star lacrosse squad recently, while two Lions were also named as second-team stars.

Midfielder David Abroms, defender Seth Oliver, and goalie Alex Levine made the cuts for South. Rama Malone and Alex Oline were second-team all-stars for Newton South.

Senior midfielder Rich LeBlanc was Waltham High's lone representative.

Hingham High stacked the 12-man team with four of its players — two on attack and one each from midfield and defense.

Aside from South and Hingham, Falmouth High was the only other team to place more than one player on the team. Falmouth placed three athletes, one each from attack, midfield, and defense, on the squad.

The local stars:

David Abroms — The teams' leading scorer this past spring, Abroms was in his fourth-year of lacrosse and his second as a starter under Coach Paul Murphy.

Murphy described the senior middie as "very quick. He's a good dodger and he doesn't get flustered under pressure."

The coach said that Abroms, also a soccer player, will attend Skidmore College where "he'll definetly be playing lacrosse."

Seth Oliver — This calm and cool defender has been an all-leaguer for two years now and proved to the backbone of the Lion backline this spring.

A wrestler and a football player, Oliver isn't afraid to rough it up a little. Add to that his knowledge and understanding of the game, and you have the makings of a solid stickman.

"He's a very good defenseman," Murphy said. "He has a very good stick and he was the key man in our clears."

Murphy said Oliver will attend Hartwick College in the fall and will most likely play lacrosse.

Alex Levine — Levine is a coach's dream. A fiery competitor, the senior gives 110 percent every time out, wether it be in a soccer uniform, a basketball jersey, or lacrosse pads.

This time out, it happened to be lacrosse pads. The goalie was named to the team for the third straight time. He was also named the Division 2 Player of the Year by one of the Boston papers.

The word on Levine from Murhy is "tremendous." The coach called Levine "tremendous" on saves, outlet passes, and just about anything else the senior got himself into.

At times, that included duty on the frontline. Several times this season, Murphy moved Levine from the cage to the attack line when South was on man-advantage.

Murphy said Levine will join teammate Abroms at Skidmore next fall. "He will definetly be playing lacrosse in college," said Murphy.

Rich LeBlanc — If Waltham Coach Rich Cacciatore had 10 players like LeBlanc, his rookie season would have been a lot more pleasant.

"I'd like to have 20 Rich LeBlancs," Cacciatore admitted.

The junior midfielder not only finished second on the the team in goals and first on assists, he led the team in attitude and spirit.

"Rich is always helping the younger guys out and leading by example," Cacciatore said. "Everyday after practice he'd be in the weight room with a couple of other guys. He's a big kid and he likes to rough it up.

"He's a very tough competitor," Cacciatore added.

The list:

First Team

Attack

Brian Sullivan, Hingham; Peter Wilson, Hingham; Greg Clemens, Falmouth.

Midfield

Brian Lukacz, Acton-Boxboro; Eric Pearson, Falmouth; Dave Abroms, Newton South; Herman Rice, Bedford; Mike McKinley, Hingham; Rich LeBlanc, Waltham.

Defense

Mike Delay, Hingham; John Carroll, Falmouth; Seth Oliver, Newton South.

Goal

Alex Levine, Newton South.

Second Team

Attack

Todd Hadley, Acton-Boxboro; Rama Malone, Newton South; John Emerson, Acton-Boxboro.

Midfield

John Secor, Wayland; Chip Hart, Wayland; Alex Olin, Newton South; Rich Lopez, Acton-Boxboro; Barclay Schiek, Bedford; Greg Pratt, Falmouth.

Defense

Dave Giarrusso, Hingham; Paul Rossi, Falmouth; Bruce Park, Bedford.

Goalie

Chris Morland, Falmouth.

DiStefino knocks out 10 as South wins big, 4-1

NEWTON — Righthander Dave DiStefino, just picked up from the Newton West All-Stars, struck out 10 in a Newton South uniform Thursday night to lead his new teammates to a 4-1 victory over Sharon in the Southeast Massachusetts Baseball Tournament.

The Newton South squad put out an open invitation to the three other Newton leagues in a hope to boost its roster for the upcoming tourney playoffs. DiStefino, a hard-throwing 12-year old, joined South along with Paul McCue, a speedballer who starred with the District 17 runner-ups in the recently completed Little League Tournament.

Thursday, DiStefino had his fastball working overtime, as he struck out the double-figured bundle of Sharon bats. Although he walked seven in the game, DiStefino kept himself out of hot water with the K's.

Stephen Fichbach's RBI-triple in the third inning proved to be the eventual game-winner, as Newton South never looked back. Dan Hausman grounded out to force in Newton's second run in the inning.

DiStefano added to his lead, scoring on a McCue RBI-ground out in the fourth to put South up, 3-0.

On Monday, Norwood beat Newton, 5-1, as South stranded 10 runners on base and put the leadoff man of the inning on just four times throughout the game.

Newton South (3-1 in Division II and 5-3 overall) will play at Needham tonight and will play Randolph on the road Wednesday before the playoffs begin.

Down the road, Newton South will compete in the Braintree Baseball Tournament, which will begin on Friday.

Blake earns Holy Cross lacrosse letter

Blake, a transfer from New Hampshire, played in all 15 games and had one assist. He was credited with 35 ground balls. Coach Bob Lindsay's teamm won four of its final five games to close 8-7, the crusaders' fifth consecutive winning season.

Goalie Clinic registration open

The 1986-87 Goalie Clinic, sponsored by Newton Youth Hockey, is now accepting application/registration for all goalies of the Travel, Intramural and independent teams from all towns and cities of Squirt, PeeWee, Bantam and Midget levels.

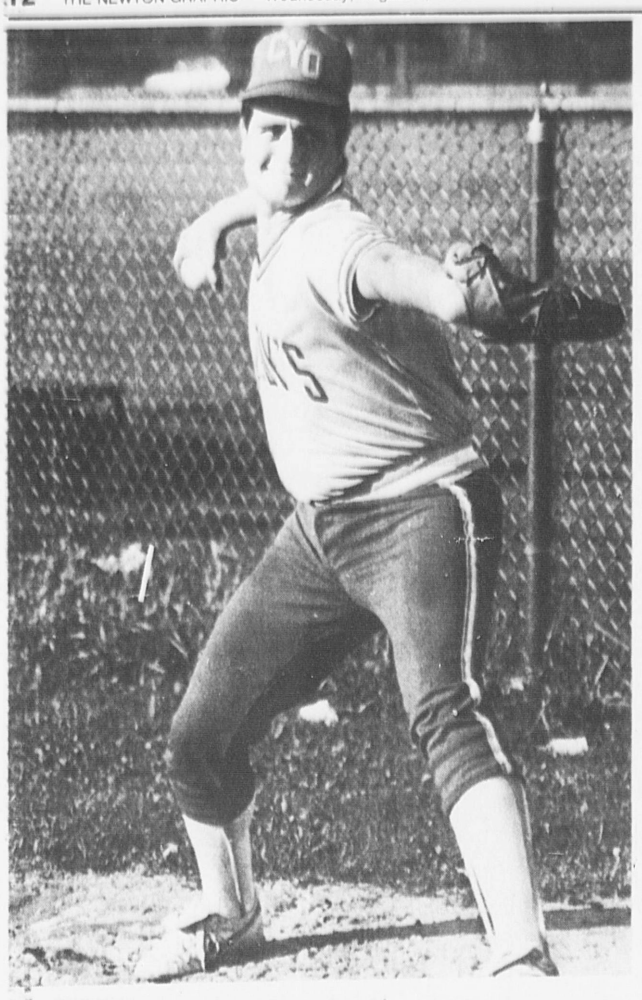

Tad Doherty, a graduate of Boston University, assistant goalie coach of Europa Cup at Babson College, and in September will be the assistant hockey coach at Hobart College, is heading the clinic staff.

The Goalie Clinic is being held at the Fessenden School Rink in West Newton on two consectutive weekends: Sept. 13, 14 and 20, 21. Squirts and PeeWees are scheduled from 6:20 to 7:20 p.m.; Bantams and Midgets from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m., each day (four total hours of ice per goalie).

Acceptace will be on a first registered basis as there is a limit of 20 goalies per session. Charge for the total clinic is $35.

For one information and registration form, please call: 244-0644 or 527-5970 evenings.

Lancers to boast experience

By Roy LeBlanc

NEWTON — An 11-7 record and second straight tournament berth speak for themselves. But when that is accomplished with only two seniors and three proven players, it becomes even more impressive.

"It was a real good year for the kids," said Newton Catholic baseball coach Don Dabenigno, who headed the drive to the tournament in his final season at the helm. "We qualified with a lot of inexperience. Some of the other kids really came along."

Dabenigno leaves the club with 12, 12 and 11 wins in his three years at the helm. He made the tournament twice, and would have made it his first season, had the current qualifying rules been in place.

Next year, though, the Lancer athletic director will coach only basketball, as the combination of a full teaching load, athletic director and coaching two sports got to be a bit much.

But he can go out knowing he got the most out of his final season. In addition to the handicap of inexperience, the three proven players didn't have the years they were capable of, based on past performances.

Going into this season, Dabenigno figured he could count on Jeff Sherman, Frank Battista and Nick Abruzzi to carry the club.

Battista probably had the best all-around year of the three. He led the club in hitting at .481 and was the best defensive catcher in the league.

When he wasn't behind the plate, Battista was either on the mound or at shortstop. On the mound, he racked up a 4-2 record with a 2.40 earned run average, second on the team. The hard-throwing righty will be the unquestioned ace of the staff next season.

On top of everything else, Battista led the club in stolen bases with 14, and wasn't thrown out once.

The other two didn't have the senior years one might have expected bases on past seasons.

Sherman did finish second on the club in hitting, but was a long way behind Battista at .320. Part of that might have been due to the fact that he switched positions mid-season. After playing first for all of his Newton Catholic career, Sherman switched to the outfield to help settle down an inexperienced group. The move helped erase one of the team's weaknesses, but may have hurt Sherman's personal stats.

On the mound, Sherman did everything that was expected of him. A lefty with a good fastball, he went 4-2, with one of the losses coming in the tournament. His ERA was a sparkling 1.48, and he fanned 82 during the season.

Like Sherman, Abruzzi helped defensively in the outfield when he wasn't on the mound, but his hitting fell off from his junior year. As a junior, the lefty batted over .400. This time around, his final mark was .277. He did pick up two wins on the mound and was an important part of the offense as a leadoff hitter.

With only co-captains Abruzzi and Sherman gone, whoever takes over as coach should have the luxury of an experienced nucleus.

Battista is the cornerstone of course. He'll be counted on as the top hitter and ace pitcher.

Mike Donnellan will also be back to patrol shortstop. That job was a potential problem for Dabenigno when the year started, and he definitely wanted to avoid moving Battista there and weakening the catching post. Donnellan's development enabled him to do that.

Though it wasn't much of an offensive year for the junior, Donnellan made only four errors at short.

"He's really starting to develop into a first-class shortstop," said the coach.

Donnellan also saw some time on the mound, and will take on more of those duties next spring.

Next to Donnellan was junior Mike Falanga at third. He made the transition from second and got better and better as the year went along. He hit only .227, but that still placed him fifth on the club, showing the lack of depth the lineup had. Another year's maturity should help him add to that figure substantially.

John Falanga, Mike's younger brother, surprised everyone this year by finishing third on the club in hitting as a freshman. The leftfielder hit .311, and drove in two runs in the tournament game. He's not a power hitter, but makes contact and will move up to the top of the lineup somewhere next year.

The right side is a little more unsettled, though based on the last few weeks of the season, the decisions may be easier.

Junior Mark Ralto's development this season is what enabled Sherman to move to the outfield. He made great strides in the second half as a first baseman, and started to hit the ball in the last couple of weeks.

Another one who came on in the second half was Chris Kane. The second baseman missed much of the season with an arm injury, but looked good when he won the second base job.

"He has the tools," said Dabenigno. "He's very smooth around the bag and he's not afraid to get dirty."

The frontrunners for the two open outfield jobs are John Taylor and Tom Walsh. Both juniors played several positions this spring.

Taylor was primarily a backup catcher when the year started, but he wound up playing the infield and the outfield as well. He'll likely be in the outfield most of the time an behind the plate when Battista pitches.

Taylor showed some promise with the bat, but will need more consistency as a senior.

Walsh was the fourth outfielder much of this year and will get every chance to win a starting job next year. It won't come without a challenge, however.

Sophomore J.J. Donovan improved quite a bit this season and could be ready to make a run at a starting job as a junior. No matter who wins the job, all the outfielders will see a lot of time with the lineup changes depending on the pitching.

Still in the development stage are sophomores-to-be Bruno Marini and David Spirito. Both should be ready to see some time in the infield next year.

If the Lancers can stay away from injuries and come up with another pitcher or two to go with Battista, they should be in pretty good shape to go for their third straight tournament berth.

St. Clement's will be the favorite in the Catholic Suburban League race again, as the league champs return their entire pitching staff.

Boys' Club moves into National final

NEWTON — There will be no more mulling over the Boys' Club-Auburndale Warriors National League playoff series, because it finally ended Friday night at West Newton Common.

After a string of postponements due to rain, the Warriors came back Thursday night to tie the series at one apiece, but the Boys' Club was not to be denied in the finale, rolling to a 6-1 victory over Auburndale to clinch a spot in the finals, which begin this week under the lights at Albemarle Field.

The Boys' Club will meet the winner of the Mosca Club-Our Lady's series, which was tied at one game apiece.

As for Friday's contest, the Boys' Club broke open a 2-1 game with three runs in the fifth inning and simply cruised from there.

George Haggie and Joe Proia led off the frame with walks to set the table for Mitch Nash, who promptly drilled a single to right, scoring the lead runner.

Chuck Proia drove in another with a single and the third run was plated on Alex DeNucci's sacrifice fly.

It was DeNucci who got the Boys' Club rolling in the first, when he singled and stole second. Jim Proia followed with a walk and Colin Ryan drove home the initial run with a single to center.

The Warriors came back in their half of the frame. Stuart Meltzer singled to center and David LeConti doubled him home with a bullet down the right-field line.

Haggie went the distance on the hill, allowing seven hits, while striking out two and walking three.

Our Lady's wins

Frank Battista literally took matters into his own hands in Our Lady's 7-3 victory over Mosca Club Friday night at Albemarle Field.

The hard-throwing righthander struck out nine, while allowing only seven hits, to knot this National League playoff series at one game apiece.

The big inning was the fifth, when the home club struck for four runs to break open a 3-2 game.

After an out, Sean McClellan and Evan Galanis walked and Paul Kearney's sacrifice bunt was misplayed, loading the bases for Battista, who helped his own cause. He blasted a triple down the left-field line for three runs. Battista would score when Greg Larson reached on an error.

Things started out innocently enough for the visitors, as Mosca took a 1-0 lead in the top of the first. Back-to-back doubles by Dan Monbouquette (2-for-4) and Pillan Thirumalaisamy (3-for-3) plated the run.

But Our Lady's went ahead in the bottom of the frame, courtesy of a handful of miscues on Mosca's part. Errors by the shortstop and left fielder set the table and overthrows by the pitcher and center fielder cleaned the kitchen.

In the third, Thirumalaisamy drove in Mark Maiocca (single) for Mosca's second run.

They got their third in the sixth, when Jon Glick singled in Thirumalaisamy, who also had singled to open up the frame.

Losing pitcher Glick struck out seven, while walking five. The righthander only allowed three hits, but the slew of errors would spell doom for Mosca.

Burke misses Ohio trip by 2 strokes

HOLYOKE — Newton's Greg Burke missed a trip to Ohio by only two strokes when he finished eighth in the recent Insurance Youth Golf Classic at the Wyckoff Country Club.

The top five players in that tournament qualified for the national finals in the 18th annual Big "I" Insurance Youth Golf Classic, sponsored by the Independent Insurance Agents of America.

Burke finished with a 76-78-154, with a 152 being good enough to send Andy Drohen to the nationals in fifth place.

Another local youngster, Weston's John Perry, shot 87-85-172.

Salem's Bobby Clark was the top qualifier in the state with a 73-73-146. Jason Cook of Easton was two strokes back, with the other qualifiers being Lou O'Keefe (Lynnfield), Darrin Bouley (Fairhaven) and Drohen (Haverhill).

D'Angelo Mt. St. Joseph star

With a 5-1 mound record and a .512 batting clip, senior Linda D'Angelo of Newton proved to be a major factor in the recent softball success of Mount St. Joseph's Academy of Brighton.

With D'Angelo's accurate throwing arm and lethal bat, Mt. St Joseph's moved up the Division II ladder to become the 10th ranked team in the state, compiling a 13-1 record.

D'Angelo, a Silver Lake Ave. resident, has been accepted to MIT in the fall, and plans to study biology and astrophysics. She was awarded the Mt. Saint Joseph's scholar-athlete scholarship, and was also the recepient of one of the 1,000 scholar-athlete scholarships given out by the U.S. Army.

The 17-year-old senior captain plays right field when not busy on the mound.

Norton new SID at Pine Manor College

CHESTNUT HILL — Waltham's Steve Norton was named Sports Information Director at Pine Manor College Friday by Dean of Academics Nancy White.

Norton, 30, will assume his duties in September, taking over for Bruce Bickford. Norton will also act as the school's cross-country coach. The Waltham native previously worked at Wellesley High and Winchester High as head coach of cross country.

WALTHAM — Jerry Marcus, Jim Proia and Alex DeNucci, all of Newton, Watertown's Ari Koufos and Waltham's Jack Clark have been awarded letters for their participation on the Bentley College baseball team, Coach Bob DeFelice announced recently.

It was a rebuilding year for the Falcons, who finished the season with a 14-25 record. Probably the highlight of the season came in the Northeast-8 Conference playoffs when they upset Stonehill and defeated Saint Anselm before falling to Springfield in the championship game.

Marcus and Proia were starters for the Falcons, at shortstop and first base, respectively. Marcus, who appeared in 31 games, hit .191 with a homer, 12 RBIs, five sacrifices and 15 walks. Proia, in his first collegiate season, connected at a .250 clip and also contributed four doubles, two homers, 11 RBIs and 21 walks.

Koufos, a sophomore in his first collegiate season, and Clark, a freshman, were pitchers for the Falcons. Koufos, who struck out a school-record 13 batters against Babson (breaking a mark held by Waltham native Mark Claffey), was 1-5 with a 5.44 earned run average and 33 strikeouts and 44⅔ innings. Clark saw only limited action (seven innings) after missing much of the season due to getting hit in the face with a line drive during batting practice.

DeNucci saw action in 15 contests as a reserve outfielder, hitting .185 with five hits in 27 at bats.

Marcus, who is majoring in finance, is a 1983 graduate of Newton South High School, while Proia and DeNucci are both 1985 grads of Newton North and accountancy majors.

Clark, also an accountancy major, graduated from Waltham High School in 1985. Koufos, a 1984 graduate of Watertown High, is undecided on his major.

Marcus is the son of Marcus and Maurice Marcus of 72 Esty Farm Road. Proia is the son of Dominic and Catherine Proia of 17 Peabody St., and DeNucci is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Joseph DeNucci of 119 Warwick Road.

Koufos is the son of Anastasios and Magdalini Koufos of 9 King St. Clark is the son of John and Joy Clark of 303 Prospect Hill Road.

B. Seltzer cops U.S. Junior chess title

Bobby Seltzer, a sixth grader at the Jackson School in Newton, placed first in the under 12 section of the U.S. Junior Chess Open, held July 18-20 in Pittsburgh.

Bobby, president of the Newton YMCA Junior Chess Club, is captain and coach of the chess team at Jackson School. He also is a member of the Framingham Chess Club.

Antique cars exhibit at mall

CHESTNUT HILL — The final installment of antique cars from the Museum of Transportation are on display at The Mall at Chestnut Hill, capping off The Mall's summer-long salute to the Brookline-based institution.

A show-quality 1970 Mercedes 280 SL coupe roadster will headline the August exhibit. This convertible model, which has a detachable hard roof, was manufactured for three years only, between 1969 and 1971.

The auto is on loan from the Dearborn Automobile Co., and has won awards at local and nation antique auto competitions. The Mercedes' appearance at The Mall is a preview to the Museum of Transportation's fall show (opening Aug. 29) entitled, "The First Century: One Hundred Years of Mercedes Benz."

A 1937 Super 8 Packard Town Car can also been seen at The Mall in August. This limousine model, complete with running boards, is available for rent, and seats six. In 1937, Packard Town Cars were compared to Cadillacs or Rolls Royces, and were a true luxury to own.

Newton East 'Stars gain in tournament

The Newton East All-Stars are keeping busy in a Southeast Massachusetts Baseball Tournament and, after playing three of its 10 games, sport a 2-1 record.

The 14-team tourney will continue through early August when the playoffs start. The tourney attracts teams from Braintree, Hyde Park, Canton, Milton, Dorchester, Walpole, Sharon, Needham, Norwood.

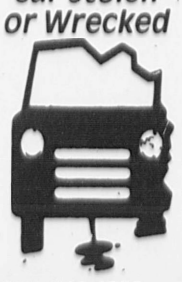

Newton beat Walpole, 9-5, behind an Andy Gregory three-run homer. Steve Elliott pitched five and two-thirds innings for the win.

Danny Finklestein and Chris Mensoian combined on a three-hitter as Newton beat Braintree American Red, 9-0. In that game, Bob O'Toole had two doubles and a single, Chip Vance added a double and a single and Elliott also had a double and a single.

Newton's only loss came at the hands of a strong Hyde Park squad, 8-1. Bob O'Toole pitched for Newton and was victimized by a grand slam homer in the third inning. Dan Housman walked home with Newton's only run.

Library institutes dial-a-story

NEWTON — The Newton Free Library has recently begun a program titled Dial-A-Story for children.

Perons wishing to use this library service should call 552-7148 anytime. A short story is told by a member of the Main Junior Library staff.

Geared for elementary school-age children, the story may be fact or fiction, myth, drama, comedy or biography.

Dail-A-Story might also include a riddle, a joke, or an announcement of an upcoming event.

Deal-A-Story is a gift from the Friends of the Newton Free Library.

'Alumni' are new basketball champs

NEWTON — The Alumni, are the new champions of the Newton Parks and Recreation Women's Summer Basketball League.

Runners up in the league were The Troubadour Tigers.

Old photos wanted

NEWTON — Area residents who have old photographs of Newton High School buildings, student activities, sports events or graduation scenes of the mid 1930's are asked to loan them for use in a 50th reunion program book.

The Class of '36 will hold its Golden Anniversary reunion on October 4 at the Newton Marriott. Committee members wish to include NHS scenes in the book. All photos will be returned.

Call Kay Bankart 235-6743 for mailing or pick-up details.

Market is open on Tuesdays

NEWTON — Tuesday is Newton Farmer's Market Day at city hall. Every Tuesday until Oct. 28 from 2:30 to 6:30 p.m. residents and visitors are encouraged to stroll through the open air market and choose from a variety of freshly picked fruits and vegetables.

This is the market's seventh season.

The Newton Farmer's Market is sponsored by the Newton Parks and Recreation Dept.

For further information, call 552-7120.

Celebrity Golf, Tennis Tournament set

NEWTON — The Fund for the Arts in Newton (FAN) will hold its Second Annual Celebrity Golf and Tennis Tournament at the Brae Burn Country Club on Monday, Sept. 15.

Celebrity participants this year include K.C. Jones, Bob Lobel, Frank Avruch and Dave Maynard along with many other celebrity guests from the world of sports, television and radio.

Lunch, golf and tennis with the celebrities, an awards dinner hosted by WHDH's Jess Cain, the master of ceremonies, and the presentation of the Theodore D. Mann Cup combine to make an exciting day for participants while supporting the activities of the seven FAN affiliates.

A contribution of $150 for a golf spot or $75 for a tennis spot will enable people to join in this event.

For more information or to sign up, call the Fund for the Arts office, 332-9110.

The Fund for the Arts in Newton is a non-profit fundraising organization established in 1982 to help underwrite the artistic activities of its affiliates: the Newton Art Association, Newton Art Center, Newton Television Foundation, the Newton Choral Society, Newton Country Players, Newton Cultural Affairs Inc. and the Newton Symphony Orchestra.

Glee club to perform

NEWTON — The Highland Glee Club, a 35-voice men's singing group, will participate in 10th anniversary celebrations of Faneuil Hall Marketplace in Boston on Aug. 7, from 5:30 to 6:45 p.m.

The club, whose members come from greater Boston suburbs including Arlington, Needham, Newton, Wellesley, Weston, and others, will join with other Boston-area singing groups in a special concert at Faneiul Hall that will kick off a month-long celebration designed to focus national attention on the marketplace.

Over 1,000 singers from choruses throughout the area are expected to take part in the opening-day festivities on Aug. 7.

John Oliver, director of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, will lead the chorus in the performance of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Let Freedom Ring," and "This is My Country."

The 18th United States Army Band will accompany the chorus.

Book show coming to library

NEWTON — Award winning books from the New England Book Show will be on view in the glass cases at the Newton Free Library. 414 Centre St., Newton Corner Aug. 18 to Aug. 29.

The books cover a wide variety of topics, for both children and adults.

Sponsored by the bookbuilders of Boston, the show is divided into three categories: education, general trade and other. The books included in the show represent the winners of a juried exhibit of the best of New England book design and manufacturing, as well as a selection of publishers' choice books produced in 1985. Books are selected by the bookbuilders for excellence in total design quality, manufacturing quality, limitations and the publishers' objectives for each title.

The Bookbuilders of Boston is comprised of representatives of the New England publishing industry, their suppliers of materials, manufacturers, and individuals in related fields such as design, education and library work. The group's purpose is to foster an interest in better bookmaking and to promote methods towards improving book design and manufacturing.

The silicon chip of lighting

By Better Home and Gradens

Not since Thomas Alva Edison succeeded in making a loop of carbonized cotton thread glow in a vacuum for 40 hours, thus discovering the incandescent lamp, has a new invention lit up the lighting industry like the halogen bulb, reports Bet'er Homes and Gardens Decorating Magazine.

Amid a flurry of superlatives touting its impeccable design and perfect function, it arrived in homes in the early 1970s as the power behind the sleek Tizio lamp. It quickly became the silicon chip of lighting, changing the shape of household lamps as drastically as the chip changed computers.

The feats of this ultimate lighting machine are, by now, legendary. It can produce light equal to an incandescent bulb 10 times its size. A 100-watt incandescent bulb — about 4½ inches long and 2¼ inches in diameter — produces about 1,750 lumens, whereas a 100-watt, 2½- by ¼-inch halogen bulb produces 1,800 lumens.

It consumes about half the power, produces half the heat and lasts up to seven times longer than its bigger brother.

In design, however, the tiny, versatile halogen has had the greatest impact. Lamps are no longer bulky necessities to challenge designers' wits. Recessed halogen lighting now succeeds in close quarters, and a single halogen torchiere bathes an entire room with light. Today's halogen lamps are svelte, sculptural and hardworking objects d'art — many of which are fit for museum collections.

The superbulb's early years, though, were humble. In 1959, two General Electric scientists in Cleveland, E.H. Wiley and E.G. Fridrich, developed the minibulb for residential use. First, halogens — iodine, fluorine, chlorine, bromine and astatine — were combined inside the bulb. In an ordinary incandescent bulb, the tungsten filament, burning at high temperatures, disintegrates and blackens the inside of the bulb.

The new look in TV's

By Popular Mechanics
A Hearst Magazine

For the first time since color hit television broadcasting, major changes are in the air — superwide screens, ultra-fine detail and picture-frame monitors.

The longtime dream of a flat, thin display you can wall-mount like a painting is in various states of development in laboratories around the world, according to the July issue of Popular Mechanics, but that is not an immediate goal.

The first target is to improve TV's image revolution by putting more picture detail on the screen to give TV's relatively crude, cartoon-like dot-and-line pattern more of the fine-pitched tones and depth as that of a photograph.

One system, Japan's HDTV, would result in an image superior to 35mm motion picture film and approaching that of a 35mm slide.

HDTV stands for High-Definition Television, developed by NHK, Japan's public TV service. It would provide wider TV display — a more natural field of view that corresponds to human vision and is closer in proportion to movie theater screens. HDTV now is under study by an international standards committee.

Current TV screens have a width-to-height ratio of four-to-three. The picture is composed of 525 horizontal scan lines. Dots of color — called pixels, for picture elements — populate each scan line. HDTV would about double the number of scan lines to 1,125 and increase the width-to-height ratio to five-to-three. Its high pixel count would eliminate grain.

As it stands now, HDTV can't be received by current TV sets and an immediate switch to HDTV would make current sets and broadcast facilities obsolete. Methods of transmitting HDTV and conventional TV simultaneously are being studied.

In the more immediate future, digital TV sets with improved image quality should be available in the next year or two.

There is more good news about TV display. For 40 years experts have been predicting that flat, thin, wall-hanging TV is just five years away. But there has been more progress made along that line in the last five years than in the previous 35.

Two types of thin TVs are under development. One is the liquid-crystal display or LCD, similar to pocket calculators and pocket TVs. The other is the familiar cathode ray tube or CRT, without its current depth. LCD probably will arrive first, but CRT promises to look better.

In recent months, Japanese manufacturers have demonstrated LCD color screens 10 inches and larger. They lack the rainbow of colors now available in CRTs. They need more brightness and color tones, which the makers say will be possible — in five years.

Flat CRTs, by Japan's Panasonic—Matsushita and America's Lumitron, have solved the brightness and color problems. Matsushita's 10-inch diagonal color CRT measures about four inches thick and weighs about 30 pounds. Lumitron promises to weigh in this year with a 35-inch diagonal model just three inches thick.

For the time being, the company will supply military and commercial users.

'Discman' plays hot tunes

You won't have any trouble choosing a compact-disc player that delivers very high quality sound — they all do. But if your budget is tight, the Sony D-5 may be the right model for your needs.

While evaluating 15 compact-disc players recently, the electronic engineers at Consumer Reports magazine took a close look at the Sony D-5, known informally as the "Discman." Priced at only $299, it is not only the least expensive CD player, it is also the first portable one.

Like the larger CD players tested, the Sony D-5 can be easily connected to an existing hi-fi system. But the D-5 also contains its own amplifier and headphone jack. Plug in earphones or powered speakers, and you can listen to CD recordings just about anywhere. If you buy the $50 battery pack (which uses ordinary batteries), you can even take the D-5 out for a stroll.

The sound quality of the Sony D-5 was as excellent as the larger machines, although the engineers did find a very subtle dulling in the extreme high-frequency range.

The D-5 was not able to compensate for dirty or damaged discs as well as most of the other players tested, and its scan function was slower. But it was fast at locating tracks, and it had an unparalleled immunity to bumps When it was carried with its battery pack or even held upside down and shaken, the laser beam didn't miss a beat. The engineers don't recommend jogging with it, however. The frequent bumping against the body may be too much for the tracking mechanism to handle.

As small as it is the D-5 has all of the necessary features.

Gadget centralizes controls

The Control Central is designed primarily for use with a television set, a VCR and a cable-converter box, but will also work with a compact disc player or a video disc player. It looks like a typical top-of-the-line remote control, with some 36 push buttons. Circuitry inside copies the signal of other remote controls and stores them in a solid-state memory.

Recently the engineers at Consumer Reports magazine programmed it to duplicate the commands of a variety of remote controls. The result? It performed successfully with every brand and model tried.

To program the Control Central, put it into a Learn mode by pressing a tiny toggle switch, a Source key and an Enter key. Then place it nose to nose with another remote control and simultaneously press buttons on each for such settings as Power, Volume and Channel.

When the display reads "Function learned," a flip of the toggle switch puts the controller into the Use mode. It took about 15 minutes to transfer the 37 functions of a full-featured remote control into the GE's memory.

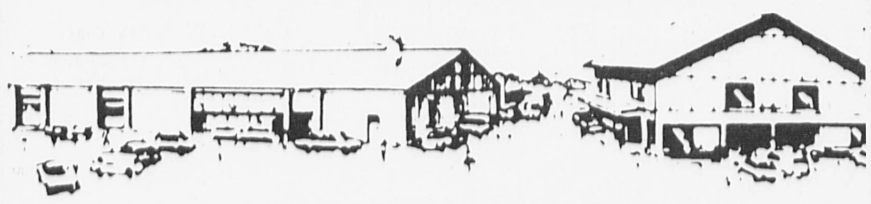

General Electric says the Control Central can remember at least 90 commands. The engineers, in fact, stuffed it with 155 commands, and it duly digested them all.

You can also program the controller by means of "function commands," using its built-in library of 87 descriptive words such as Color and Tint. The function commands are often essential if you want the GE to mimic all the functions of a full-featured remote control.

Campus briefs

Patricia Kerry Hunt, daughter of Margaret and Edwin Hunt of Newtonville, graduated with honors from the University of Massachusetts this past May. Hunt received the Clinton Scovell Scholarship, the University Scholarship, the Mass. State Scholarship, and the Mass. Honors Scholarship.

She was also named to the Dean's List. She served as the Selections Chairperson for the Mortar Board National Honor Society during her senior year and was named to "Who's Who in America's Colleges and Universties."

Dina Freedman, daughter of Miriam and Nathan Freedman of West Newton, has been awarded a scholarship by the National Trust for Historic Preservation and Yankee Publishing Inc., of Dublin, N.H. Freedman will be working as a Yankee Intern with the Massachusetts Council for the Arts and Humanities for 12 weeks this summer.

Alan and Hyman Samuel Beshansky, sons of Aaron and Selma Beshansky of Newton Highlands, recently received their degrees at Northeastern University. They are among the 110 students enrolled in the program.

Mark Newman of Chestnut Hill received a bachelor of arts degree in history from Connecticut College in New London, Conn.

Emily Newman of Chestnut Hill, who received a bachelor of arts degree in russian language and literature from Barnard College summa cum laude will enter Harvard Medical School this fall.

Jan Shapiro of Auburndale, faculty member at the Berklee School of Music and noted vocalist, will be spotlighted as a featured vocalist throughout Eastern Massachusetts this summer.

Shapiro appeared at the Sheraton Tara in Danvers on July 22 through 26. She will appear at the Sheraton Tara in Framingham on August 19 through 23. She will also perform with the "Larry Monroe Sextet" in an evening of "Jazz Under the Stars" August 14 at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston.

David H. Autor of Newton Centre, Stephanie L. Bower, of Newtonville, Stacey B. Creem, of Newton, Robert R. Gheewalla of Newton Centre, Gloria Lee of Newtonville, Karen L. Miller, of Newton, Gordon M. Novak of Newton Highlands, Leslie S. Salloway, of Newton, Risa S. Singer, of Newton Centre, Karen L. Suyemoto, of Newton, and Cynthia N. Tsamtsouris, of Newton Centre.

James Scorzelli, of Adella Avenue in West Newton, associate professor of counseling psychology, spent last year at the National University of Malaysia as a Fulbright scholar. He helped the psychology department develop a drug counseling diploma program.

Malaysia is a stop on the major drug shipment routes out of Southeast Asia; opium and heroin are inexpensive in the country. Scorzelli observed tremendous improvements in Malaysia during his stay. He plans to return to the country soon to follow up on his work.

When Suffolk University and Boston's Museum of Science co-sponsored a week-long marine science field experience at Suffolk's R.S. Friedman Station in Edmunds, Maine, some 26 youngsters took part in the program. Among the participants were Kyona Nason, 13, a seventh-grader at the Homer East School in Watertown, and Timothy Smith, 13, of Newton Centre.

Kyona Nason and Timothy Smith examine algae species with Paul Fontaine and Carl Merrill.

Dina Freedman

Carlos A. Ball, of Newton, a 1986 graduate of Tufts University, was inducted into the Massachusetts Delta Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa during a ceremony held recently at the Tufts' Medford campus. Membership in the national honor society signifies having "successfully engaged in the highest intellectual pursuits."

The following Newton area residents graduated from Newton Country Day School of the Sacred Heart June 6: Jennifer Ackil, Marjorie Brody, Jennifer Campbell (French and Theological Studies Awards), Susan English, Natalia Escobar (Science Award), Alison Mosher and Amanda Stebbins.

On Sunday, May 25, the following local students graduated from Regis College in Weston: Kathleen Marie Horkan (magna cum laude), Michelle Christine Mosher, Anna Marie Necheles and Rhonda Catherine Stisi.

Just Released — From the Americas' Oldest Mint

MEXICO'S FIRST SILVER PROOF COIN

Now available for the first time anywhere!

Remarkably Priced Just $35

Specifications
38 mm • 33.625 grams
.925 fine silver

Numismatic News of This Century

Mexico, for the first time in its long and illustrious history, has struck its very first legal tender silver proof coin! For collectors and investors alike this means an early opportunity to "lock up" a real numismatic first — a coin with the potential to soar in value and importance in the coming years.

Investors and Collectors Say It's So . . .

The popularity of Mexico's silver coinage has grown at an astounding pace. Mexico's first Libertad coin released in 1984 in ordinary condition with a whopping mintage of 1,000,000 coins — sold out in a matter of weeks. And it has already increased in value an incredible 33⅓. Will Mexico's first silver proof coin follow in its path? Many experts believe it will!

Now you have an opportunity to acquire Mexico's just released first-ever proof coin — at the official government issue price. With a maximum of only 277,000, it may well outperform even the Libertad. And scarcity combined with proven demand drive up values. Take heed!

Proof Coins — the "king" of coinage!

Proof coins are the ultimate achievement in minting and the most desired by collectors for their beauty and value. They are individually struck from special dies to produce a coin with a brilliant mirrorlike background and contrasting frosted-relief design. Mexico's first silver proof coin was struck to commemorate the World Cup soccer championship hosted by Mexico in 1986. Now you can be among the first Americans to own Mexico's new 100 Peso proof silver coin superbly struck in sterling silver.

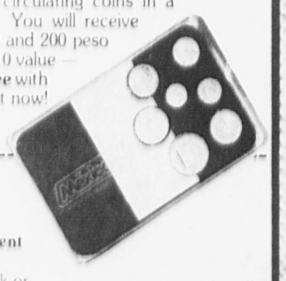

A Sellout is Expected — Order Now At Low Issue Prices

Mexico's silver coins are phenomenally popular. Consequently this first, low-mintage proof coin is destined to be an instant sellout. The official price authorized for this advance release is only $35 (even lower when bought in quantity). You will also receive a Certificate of Authenticity and an attractive display case for each coin at no additional cost! Satisfaction guaranteed or your money refunded immediately.

Mexico Mint Set $10 Value — FREE!

Mexico's currency regulations prohibit the export of its coins but through special arrangements with the Central Bank of Mexico, we have made it possible for you to own this mint set. Purchaser of Mexico's FIRST SILVER PROOF COIN will receive these legal tender coins at no additional charge. The set contains seven of Mexico's circulating coins in a sealed display case. You will receive 1, 5, 10, 20, 50, 100 and 200 peso denominations. A $10 value — yours absolutely free with your order if you act now!

Thieves break into school

WEST NEWTON - The Fessenden School on Waltham Street was broken into and $350 worth of archery equipment and a Sharp radio were reportedly stolen from the locker room July 29. Police said there was no sign of forced entry.

Oil spill closes Christina Street

NEWTON HIGHLANDS - Christina Street was closed off to traffic early July 29 because of slippery road conditions created by an oil spill, police said. Between 100 and 200 gallons of heating oil from Regalite Plastics on Needham Street was leaked onto the road and apparently some spilled into the Charles River, police said.

The Department of Environmental Quality Engineering notified the company that they would have to clean up the area at their expense, according to reports.

Embezzlement being probed

NEWTON — Police are investigating the alleged embezzlement of $40,000 from Honda Village on 371 Washington St. According to reports, an audit performed in May and June of this year shows the money was taken between October and June.

The daily cash sales reports show that less money was reported than was actually taken in, while the credit card sales were reported to be more than was actually sold, said police. The figures offset one another and the thief pocketed the difference, police said.

Hawthorne playground scuffle

NEWTON -- A Hawthorne Street resident was punched Friday by a group of white youths at the Hawthorne Playground. The group told the 19-year-old victim that his sister and cousin couldn't use the Playground because they were Spanish.

When police arrived the youths had fled.

Whirlpool bathtubs stolen

NEWTON — Five whirlpool tubs worth $2,000 each were reported stolen from a Wellesley Corporation construction site at 222 Kendrick St. Friday night.

According to police, the hinge pins to the site's gate were knocked out. A Wellesley Corp. worker who discovered the theft found the gate open and truck tire tracks on the property. Between one and 15 birch wood interior doors and frames were also taken from the site. They are valued at $120 each.

Sox player's van vandalized

NEWTON — Red Sox centerfielder Tony Armas has been slumping at the plate recently, and adding to his woes, someone reportedly attempted to torch his 1984 Econoline Ford van while it was parked in his driveway this weekend, according to reports.

The arson attempt occurred while the van was parked at his Winchester Plaza home Sunday morning, according to the city's Fire Prevention Bureau.

The vandals removed the gas cap from the van and inserted a gasoline-soaked wick into the gasoline line, resulting in "minimal damage," Fire Department officials said. The fire reportedly scorched the gas tank area but the flames never reached the gasoline inside the tank.

Armas reportedly discovered the damage Sunday morning when he discovered the gasoline tank cover opened. The attempted arson is being investigated by the Fire Prevention Bureau, the Police Department and the state's Fire Marshall's Office.

Items stolen out of four cars

OAK HILL — Four unlocked cars parked at a Dudley Road home were broken into Sunday morning and about $600 worth of personal items were stolen, police said.

A Sony Watchman television, worth $300, assorted cassette tapes and a leather cassette case were reportedly stolen from a 1980 Volkswagen Rabbit.

About $150 worth of cassette tapes and two denim jackets were stolen from a 1986 Audi. The thieves unsuccessfully tried to steal a radar detector from a 1984 Saab, police added.

Police stop man from jumping

NEWTON — At about 9 p.m. Saturday, police prevented a Newton man from jumping off the Highland Street Bridge over the Massachusetts Turnpike.

Shortly after 9 p.m. a man came into the Newton Police Station and said his son was threatening to jump off the bridge. Police arrived at the scene and spoke to the son and later transported him to Newton-Wellesley Hospital for evaluation.

Man swings cane at neighbor

NEWTON HIGHLANDS - A 65-year-old man who lives on Selwyn Road assaulted his neighbor, 71, with his cane last Tuesday, police said. As his neighbor was driving away in a car, the assailant approached the man and swung his cane at him, according to reports.

Pair charged with shoplifting

By David Weber
Staff Writer

NEWTON — An alleged shoplifter ran out of the Purity Supreme on Washington Street July 26, hopped a fence and crossed the Massachusetts Turnpike before he was arrested a short time later in Cabot Park in Newton Corner, according to police.

Police received a call around 7:30 p.m. from a store security guard who said he observed a man and a woman in Aisle 9 stuffing items into canvas bags.

When the man saw police approaching him, he bolted out the front door and across Washington Street between the Frost Motors lot and the Exxon station, according to reports.

Police said they saw him vault over a chain link fence, cross the railroad tracks, cross the turnpike, climb another chain link fence and flee on Newtonville Avenue.

The bold alleged shoplifter was a 25-year-old Dorchester man. The woman was a 33-year-old Roxbury resident. She was arrested at the store.

In the man's bag, police said they found five Armour Golden Star hams worth $10 each, two more hams worth $12 each, and one beef round tip roast cap worth $11.

The woman's bag contained four hams, each worth a little more than $10, and a pack of pork spare ribs, also worth $10, said police.

Map company gives to library fund

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann announced recently that checks from the Mosher-Adams Map Company, in the amount of $232.75 each, were distributed to the Newton Free Library Building Fund and the Senior Citizen Fund of Newton.

Mann noted that Mosher-Adams produced the new public map for the city and that the company had agreed to return a portion of its advertising revenue to the City of Newton for purposes the city deemed appropriate.

Accepting the check for the library building fund was Dorothy Reichard of the Board of Trustees, Newton Free Library. Stephen Holmes of the Newton Council on Aging received the check on behalf of the senior fund.

"Financial support is the lifeblood of non-profit organizations which provide services to groups and individuals," said Mann, "and contributions of all sizes help to keep that lifeblood flowing and enable contributors to enjoy a sense of involvement."

Newton Mayor Theodore Mann, Dot Reichard and Stephen Holmes of the Newton Council on Aging.

The Library Building fund is the mechanism for developing the monies necessary for the building of the new main library facility, while the senior fund helps to provide a variety of services to senior residents of Newton, including transportation to medical appointments.

Sandra G. Hain, of Newton, has been named Administrative Coordinator of the Women's Auxiliary at the Hebrew Rehabilitation Center for the Aged in Roslindale. This is the largest and most active hospital auxiliary in the nation.

Before coming to HRCA, Hain worked as administrative assistant to the President of Elscint Acceptance Coporation in Boston. She also has served as International Customer Relations Specialist for Bank Leumi Le-Israel in Tel Aviv, and as Director of Adult Activities at the Hartford Jewish Community Center.

She earned a B.A. and an M.S.W. from Boston University.

Henry Gorman is congratulated by Leo Breitman

Irving and Beatrice Bello, of Newton Centre, recently dedicated holiday bimah and ark covers in the Cable Synagogue of the Hebrew Rehabilitation Center for the Aged in Roslindale at a ceremony attended by several dozen family members and friends. The dedication plaque reads: "Bimah covers gift of Irving and Beatrice Bello and our children Ronald and Leslie, Kenneth and Carol, and Jonathan." Mr. Bello's mother, Rebecca, lives at HRCA. Bea Bello is a director of HRCA's Women's Auxiliary, and now is co-chairing that group's November Dinner Dance. Irving Bello is a Life Member of the HRCA's Men's Associates.

Dr. Mary J. Cronin, director of University Libraries at Loyola University in Chicago, has been appointed university librarian at Boston College. She succeeds Thomas F. O'Connell, who has retired after 10 years of service. Cronin's tenure will begin September 8.

Eric Schwartz of Newton will be among the finalists competing in the 1986 GAMES / Merriam-Webster fifth annual U.S. Open Crossword Championship, to be held Saturday, August 16, in New York City.

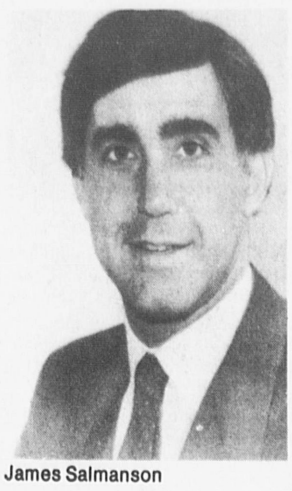

Over 9,000 aspirants entered the qualifying puzzle, published in the March issue of GAMES. The 250 finalists were determined after a challenging series of four tie-breaker puzzles.

A total of $3,250 in cash prizes is at stake for the top 20 finalists, including a Grand Prize of $1,500 and a six-foot-long pencil awarded to the champion.

Henry Gorman, a Newton resident for over 30 years, was recently named Honorary Director of Jewish Vocational Service at the agency's 49th Annual Meeting.

Gorman's commitment to JVS, a nonprofit, nonsectarian career agency, began almost 17 years ago. He has actively participated in several committees. Gorman runs PVC Incorporated, a graphics distributorship.

Several Newton residents were recently elected to the Jewish Vocational Services Board of Directors: Robin Dushman of Waban, Investment Manager at Tufts University and member of the board of the Greater Boston Diabetes Society; Mildred Guberman Kravetz of Newton Highlands, chair of the Combined Jewish Philanthropies Scholarship Committeee; Dr. Jerome Rogoff of Waban, Chief of Inpatient Psychiatry at Faulkner Hospital; Richard Salter of Newton Highlands, vice president of sales for GWV INterna-

Computer offers color 'prescriptions'

NEWTON — Andrew's Decorating Center has installed a new computer-based system designed to match customer's color samples with speed and accuracy.

The new technology, Moore's Computer Color Matching System, is available at more than 130 Benjamin Moore dealers throughout the nation. The system produces a "prescription" for any solid-color sample which can be "filled" using Benjamin Moore Paints.

Apollo founder starts new company

NEWTON — Stellar Computer has established corporate headquarters at 100 Wells Ave. Stellar Computer is the latest venture of former Apollo Computer Chairman William Poduska and former Executive Vice-President of Motorola Arthur Carr.

The two-story, 22,000 square foot office building will also house the new company's research and development facilities as well as a light assembly area. The new company will manufacture high-performance graphics workstations to be used by technical professionals.

University Bank elects assist. treasurer

NEWTON — University Bank has elected Anthony Squillacioti of Norwood Assistant Treasurer. Squillacioti has also been appointed the branch manager for the newest branch of University Bank, in Allston.

A graduate of Boston College and the Massachusetts School for Financial Studies, Mr. Squillacioti brings to his post 10 years of banking experience.

Local man developing Dedham Place

NEWTON— Resident Kurt Saracen is developing Dedham Place, a 350,000 square foot office/hotel complex. It is the first project of its kind to be built on Route 128.

Currently under construction, the 15 acre property is the site of a 160,000 square foot contemporary office building and a 256 room Hilton Hotel and Conference Center. Saracen is focusing much attention on enhancing the architectural integrity of the office space without compromising practicality.

Saracen owns and manages more than 1 million square feet of prime commercial properties in the Northeast.

Another library computer system sold

WEST NEWTON — CLSI, the world's leading supplier of library automation systems, announced the sale of the second CLSI system in North Carolina to the Cumberland County Public Libary in Fayetteville.

CLSI will deliver the equipment when the new headquarters for the Cumberland County Public Library will be finished.

CLSI has also signed a $1.18 million contract with the Phoenix Public Library in Phoenix, Arizona. The library is replacing its system with the CLSI system.

CLSI will install the equipment in October, 1986, when the library's computer room will be finished.

In addition, CLSI has signed a contract with the Blue Ridge Regional Libary in Martinsville, Virginia. CLSI will deliver the equipment to the library in November, 1986, when the computer room will be finished.

CLSI appoints new finance controller

WEST NEWTON — CLSI, the world's leading supplier of library automation systems, announced the appointment of Richard Biegun to fill the newly-created position of Controller in its Department of Finance and Operations. Roderick L. Fox will fill the position of Director of Human Resources.

Biegun will be responsible for the daily operations of the financial division. He is a Certified Professional Accountant who had previously worked as Manager of Internal Audit and a member of the Profit Improvement Team at the Shipley Company.

Fox has spent 18 years in human resource management, most recently at Dyonics, Inc., in Andover. He expects to work closely with the recruitment process.

Company adds BiblioFile to system

WEST NEWTON — CLSI and The Library Corporation in Washington, D.C., signed a distributor agreement for the Library Corporation's BiblioFile system. Under the agreement, the BiblioFile product will include an IBM-PC or PC look-a-like, CD-Rom drive, and a subscription to the Bibliofile database.

BiblioFile allows libraries to achieve significant savings on the telecommunications and connect charges associated with the cataloguing services of bibliographic utilities. Libraries can now access bibliographic records locally and enter them into their CLSI System at their convenience.

Sales associates rewarded for efforts

NEWTON — Eve Cotugno and Marion McGann received Medallion Club Certificates for being the leading sales associates for Hunneman and Company/Better Homes and Gardens. They have achieved a residential sales volume of over $1 million.

The Medallion Club Certificates come from the Better Homes and Gardens Real Estate Service, a national network representing more than 1,100 offices in 50 states.

Also recognized was Aileen B. Cabitt, who received Hunneman's Presidential Listing Award, for exceeding 12 listings since Jan. 1. The three awards were presented by Saul B. Cohen, president of Hunneman and Company, Inc.

Nursing homes report sites admission policies

Sen. Jack Backman

NEWTON — "Medicaid discrimination in admission to nursing homes is illegal. It is taking place on a regular basis. It is difficult to prove. However, it is informally admitted by the nursing home industry as a fact of life and a financial necessity," said retiring Sen. Jack H. Backman (D. Brookline-Newton) at a news conference releasing the report, "Access to Nursing Homes - The Experience of Families," by the University of Massachusetts Gerontological Institute.

"Current practice allows blatant discrimination because there is virtually no system of accountability in place," continued the Senate chairman of the Human Services Committee.

Last year, the Nursing Home Ombudsman Program alone received 150 complaints from people claiming that access was denied because they or their relatives were Medicaid recipients.

According to Backman, "Equal access to medical care was a basic tenet of the Medicaid and Medicare models — that people not be denied access to care because they could not afford to pay. However, these programs have not worked out as planned and what we have today is a two-tier system which gives preference to those who can afford to pay or have private source of payment.

"Hundreds of millions of public dollars are going to support the for-profit nursing home industry. Yet, they operate with little restriction or oversight in regard to their admission policies," the senator continued.

There are no uniform standards for nursing home admission. Admission is based on the individual home and its own set of standards and requirements.

Backman concluded by stating that "One solution for this problem is Senate Bill 1928, the Medicaid Access Bill, which was heard by the Human Services Committee."

This bill would require that nursing homes maintain a waiting list of all applicants and give a dated receipt upon application. The nursing home would then be required to accept patients in order of application, with certain exceptions. This procedure has been in effect in Connecticut for several years.

Boston College names senior vice president

NEWTON — Boston College Vice President for University Relations James P. McIntyre has assumed the newly created position of senior vice president, after 10 years of overseeing the offices of communications, alumni and development.

The new post will enable McIntyre "to be able to concentrate more fully on those aspects of major giving that he has set in place over the past several years," said Boston College President J. Donald Monan, SJ, in announcing the appointment.

"With voluntary support having risen from under $2 million in fiscal 1975-76 to over $11 million in 1985-86," Monan added, "Dr. McIntyre has established a remarkable record of achievement and successfully laid the groundwork for the new types of effort and levels of financial support that our ambitious plans require."

McIntyre, 52, received a bachelor's degree in English from Boston College in 1957, after which he served in the US Army until 1959. He earned a master's degree in education from BC in 1961 and a doctorate in higher education and administration in 1967.

McIntyre's professional career at the university began when he became assistant director of admissions and financial aid in 1959. He subsequently became executive assistant to the vice president for student affairs in 1966, vice president for student affairs in 1968, and vice president for university relations in 1976.

From 1960-66, he taught courses in child growth and development, philosophy of education and tests and measurements at BC; from 1969-83 he ran an honors seminar on "The American University and the Student" and directed Scholar of the College projects on student judicial systems, student radicalization, campus unrest and educational psychology.

McIntyre was evaluation consultant to the Massachusetts Title I Program (1976); executive director of the Massachusetts Governor's Task Force on the Open University (1974); education consultant to the board of directors fo the National Assn. of College Auxiliary Services (1974); adivsor to the Temple University President's Committee on Student Affairs (1973); and field service coordinator for New York's Dept. of Education Study on Participation of Non-Public School children in Title I, ESEA Programs and Services, New York City (1968).

Dear Ray,
A common problem shared by my girlfriends and myself is that of giving our phone numbers to men and then not being called. This happended to me recently. I went to a singles dance and met an interesting man. Although the music was too loud, we were able to do some talking. We had a mutual attraction for one another (or so I thought), and when he asked for my number I was happy to give it to him. However, as of one week after that night, he still hasn't called. This has happened before and it makes me angry. Why do men ask for a phone number and then not call?

L.T., Watertown

Dear L.T.,
This problem tends to be one of the major ones for women in the singles world. Some men are number collectors. In some bizarre way, they derive pleasure from seeing how many numbers they can obtain in an evening. For most men it is probably a matter of priorities. A man obtains several numbers in the course of an evening and calls the most desirable — to him — first. If she accepts the other numbers go unused. If she rejects him, then he may call the next most desirable, and so on.

Other men may feel unsure of themselves and hesitate to follow through. A man may experience some self-doubt and feel that if he called she might say no. So, rather than risk rejection he simply doesn't call. Or, he may feel that he can't afford to take you out and rather than admit this, he avoids the situation.

If this is a major problem for you, try a different technique for a change. When a man asks for your number, say something like, "Why don't you give me your number instead? I'll call you and we can talk about getting together." In this way, you will have more control over the situation. If you feel that you could never call a man, read on.

Dear Ray,
Why do women give their phone number to a guy when they have no intention of going out with him? I met someone whom I really liked at a singles group recently. I thought she liked me as well and so I asked for phone number. I called to ask her out the next day and she said she couldn't make it that week because of planned activites with her children. The next week I called she couldn't make it because some relatives were coming to visit. The following week she was too tired from the visit to go out. Then the following week she said that she had decided that we really didn't have that much in common and that there was no point in our going out together.

I hate to tell you how many times I have gone through a similar scenario. And, every other guy I know has echoed the same problem. We end up wasting a lot of time and getting our hopes up only to have them dashed. We feel that we have been used for someone's ego trip of seeing how long a guy will keep calling after multiple rejections. Why do women do this?

S.S., Norwood

Dear S.S.,
This is the other side of the coin in which women complain about men who don't call after taking their numbers. Several suggestions might prove helpful. Before asking for someone's number, you might ask if she is interested in going out with you. This puts your ego on the line, but you could save yourself a lot of frustration and a disappointment. If she says, "yes," you might ask further if she has time for dating. Also, after calling someone for the first time and being put-off, for whatever reason, you might suggest that she take your number and call you when she is free. If she is interested, she'll call. If not, what have you lost? You could also try asking someone for a date at the time of meeting. If the two of you are unable to find a convenient night for this after comparing schedules then the prognosis would not seem to be very positive. Good Luck.

Bringing together former Brooklynites in Boston

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A little more than 28 years ago, Sandy Calmas got lost in Hyannisport. Looking for directions, she met the man who would eventually be her husband.

While it was the beginning of a romance, her chance meeting with Wilfred Calmas was the end of her life as a girl from Brooklyn. When the two married, they moved up north to Chestnut Hill.

Sitting in a wooden chair just off the ninth hole at the Putterham Meadows Golf Course, Calmas recalls her days in the fabled borough and her plans to recreate them with a gala reunion at the Sheraton Hotel in Boston.

In November the party, titled "Brooklyn in Boston" will be the culmination of three years of work for Calmas and Kanter Alex Zimmer of Temple Ohabei Shalom, also a Brooklynite.

The party started out as a Thomas Jefferson High School reunion for Brooklynites who migrated north, but Calmas says she decided to include all former Brooklynites because there are so many living in the greater Boston area.

"There are thousands of people from Brooklyn who live here in the Boston area," she says with only a touch of Brooklynese in her voice. "I kept meeting people who have moved here from Brooklyn. They say Boston is the Athens of America and I like to think that a lot of Brooklynites have contributed to the Athenian quality of this area."

Without a doubt, the most famous ex-Brooklynite, and the man who has had more influence on this area than anyone since Paul Revere, is one Red Auerbach, Eastern District High School Class of '36.

There are, however, plenty of lesser-known folks that Calmas would like to reach. She placed an ad in a local weekly asking anyone interested to contact her. While response, she says, has been good, one letter in particular was very interesting.

"I received a letter from a woman who used to be a classmate of mine," she says. "She was one of my best friends when I was young, but I hadn't seen her since we were 11. She will be at the reunion."

The reunion, she says, will be a chance for ex-Brooklynites to rekindle old relationships and relive the varied culture of America's fourth largest city.

"The thing about Brooklyn is that it was a very sociable place," she says. "Here, so much of the social life revolves around backyards, but there really weren't any in Brooklyn. People would hang out on the streets in front of their buildings, which would bring a lot of different people together."

Also, Calmas remembers Brooklyn as the original melting pot.

"So many people came together in Brooklyn from all over the world," she says. "The population was so dense that everyone learned a little about everyone else's culture."

City grants clerks pay hike

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Just hours after they learned Asst. City Clerk Grace Lennon had been hospitialized with a possible heart attack, aldermen granted her and City Clerk Edward English 5-percent pay raises.

Board president Michael Malec passed on the alarming news just as the Board of Aldermen began its meeting Tuesday night.

Over the weekend, Lennon checked into the Framingham Union Hospital. Physicians suspect she has suffered a mild heart attack, Malec said.

Some aldermen had delayed an ordinance to grant Lennon's pay increase because it failed to contain the same raise for English as well.

They have charged that several of their colleagues unfairly attempted to delay English's raise until the board gave him a performance evaluation. The city reportedly has given all other department heads 5-percent raises this year.

Other board members deemed the agreement appropriate because English missed some time from work when he suffered medical problems and was being treated at an out-of-state hospital.

The board must approve any pay increases for the clerk, the assistant clerk, the treasurer and the comptroller — each an aldermanic employee under the city charter.

Malec and English over the past three months have been fashioning an "informal gentleman's agreement" to evaluate the clerk's preformance and the functioning of his office.

Two weeks ago, Aldermen Richard Bullwinkle and Richard McGrath charged Malec had arranged secret meetings with a few aldermen to settle the matter. Conditions of the clerk's employment should be decided by all board members, Bullwinkle and McGrath said.

Finance Committee Chairman Paul Coletti defended the president, saying the meetings were only informal advisory sessions that had no agenda. Later, Malec said he simply spoke to a few aldermen for preliminary advice and was not trying to prevent others from participating.

Tuesday night, Malec averted a potential full board clash by allowing the Legislation and Rules Committee and other interested aldermen to discuss the clerk's raise during a recess.

A subcommittee of Legislation and Rules has been studying a report on how to improve the functioning of the city clerk's office.

An amendment to include a raise for English failed by a 3 to 3 vote in committee, but it passed 15 to 4 on the floor of the board with little discussion. Aldermen Susan Basham, Sondra Shick, Malec and Coletti voted against the prosposal.

Basham, chairman of the subcommittee, said the real issue is whether the raise is based on merit or is a cost-of-living adjustment. "... The issue is how we're perceiving the increase," she said after the committee meeting.

During the recess session, Coletti argued the recent across-the-board raise granted to department heads was based on merit.

Aldermen accused of 'elitism'

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Some members have charged the Board of Aldermen has become "cliquey," "elitist" and too "sensitive." One even went so far as to say many of his colleagues are "lazy" and the board itself is "constipated."

A dispute over the city clerk's contract precipitated this self-imposed hailstorm of charges. But amidst all the accusations, one thing rings clear — the board's functioning has become as important an issue as anything else on its agenda.

News Analysis

Two weeks ago, aldermen Richard Bullwinkle and Richard McGrath accused board president Michael Malec of leading a "conspiracy" to deny City Clerk Edward English a 5-percent pay raise granted to other department heads.

They said the president had formed a cabal of trusted colleagues — mainly committee chairmen — and was excluding other aldermen from equal participation.

Malec has denied these charges, saying he simply consulted some aldermen for advice on the issue. He cannot be expected to talk to his 23 colleagues every time he faces a decision, he said.

Whatever merit there may be in McGrath and Bullwinkle's accusations, they are not the only board members who feel left out.

Tanning salon owner

Pleads guilty to prostitution

By David Weber
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The owner of a West Newton tanning salon, used as a front for an escort service, received a six-month suspended sentence after reaching a plea-bargaining agreement with the district attorney.

Lauren F. Hawkes, 25, of Watertown, pleaded guilty in district court to charges of procuring females for prostitution and possession of a firearm without an identification card. A third felony charge, deriving support from prostitution, was dismissed as part of the agreement.

Hawkes agreed to forfeit to the district attorney's office approximately $2,500 earned from two of her businesses, Boston's Best Escorts and Melody Telegrams. She also forfeited about $300 confiscated with credit card receipts and client card files when her home and tanning salon were searched before her arrest in April.

District Attorney Peter Bella said the money would be used in other criminal investigations.

In addition, she forfeited her .32 caliber handgun and was placed on probation for a year.

Hospitals 'look out' for AIDS blood

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

NEWTON — The Newton-Wellesley Hospital received and used, in 1985, a unit of blood products now suspected of containing AIDS antibodies, according to Rigney Cunningham, director of Public Relations and Marketing at the hospital.

The patient who received the suspect unit of blood product from the Newton-Wellesley Hospital died in 1985 of unrelated causes, according to Cunningham. However, if the blood product he received did contain the antibody to the AIDS virus, HTLV-III, the patient may have been infected with the disease before his death. If that was the case, he could have transmitted AIDS to others.

The Newton-Wellesley is not the only hospital facing this situation. In the past week, the Red Cross has notified 29 hopsitals across Massachusetts and Maine that they received units of blood or blood products possibly contaminated with the AIDS antibody. There were 47 such units distributed among the 29 hospitals, according to Blanche Lansky, director of community services at the Northeastern Region of the American Red Cross.

The Red Cross learned through its "Look Back" program that these units, all distributed before April 1985, might have been contaminated.

In April 1985, a test for the AIDS antibody was developed, and the Red Cross now screens all potential donors. When a donor's test is positive, the Red Cross searches its records to see if he has donated blood before, and if so, where the blood was distributed.

So far, the Northeastern Region of the Red Cross has found 71 potential donors who tested positive for the AIDS antibody. Forty of these people were not first-time donors; they had also given blood before the AIDS antibody test was available. These pre-April 1985 donations are the suspect units.

There is no way of knowing when the donors became positive and if their previous donations contain the antibody, says Lansky. However, their early donations could have been infectious and thus the patient who received this blood could develop the AIDS virus.

When the Red Cross tracks down a suspect unit of blood, it informs the hospital which received it. The hospital is then responsible for notifying the patient who received the unit.

Lansky stresses that even if a patient is exposed to contaminated blood, he will not necessarily develop AIDS. She says that an estimated 20 percent of people exposed to the virus will contract the disease.

Ambulance bid

Chaulk will serve city

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Chaulk Ambulance will continue providing the city's emergency medical services.

The Board of Aldermen Tuesday night allocated $147,000 to subsidize Chaulk, which will provide two Advanced Life Support (ALS) ambulances and one Basic Life Support (BLS) ambulance.

Mayor Theodore Mann originally recommended that Chaulk, which has provided ambulance service to the city for the past five years, be awarded a three-year deal. That deal was held and the board allocated an interim $140,000 subsidy for three months after some aldermen questioned the bidding process.

Led by Aldermen Richard McGrath, the board voted against Mann's original request because of concern that the bidding process was unfair to Metro Emergency Medical Services, which submitted the only other bid for the contract. In addition, many aldermen complained they were not given enough time to properly review the process.

This will be the first time the city will pay an outside contractor for ambulance service. The city formally provided its own ambulance service before hiring Chaulk in 1981.

"We first received a hint that we would have to give a subsidy in January," McGrath said. "It didn't come up during the budget talks and it wasn't until the last

'Sensible advice' on coming of age

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

NEWTON — It all started with a sleepless night four years ago.

Alice Keidan Lanckton had gone to a friend's home for a Passover celebration. Her bed in the guest room was located, she says, "so that any way I turned, a street light was shining right in my eyes." As she tossed and turned, she had a sudden inspiration. She jumped out of bed and began to write — and The Bar Mitzvah Mother's Manual.

Lanckton describes her first book as "a reassuring and amusing guide to the ritual and celebration of Bar and Bat Mitzvahs." In the 124-page illustrated paperback, Lanckton discusses everything from Bar Mitzvah history to invitations to table seating arrangements to thank-you notes. There is also a chapter about Bar Mitzvahs for special needs children.

Lanckton, who holds degrees in classics and education from Vassar College and Harvard University, has been teaching in the area for 23 years. She has taught Bar Mitzvah classes in temple school and currently teaches history and geography to Bar Mitzvah-age students at the Solomon Schechter School in Oak Hill.

Part of her inspiration for the book came after she organized her son Ben's Bar Mitzvah four years ago.

"I loved preparing for Ben's Bar Mitzvah," she says. "It was so much fun and my friends were so nice and helpful. As I said in the book, the problems associated with planning a Bar Mitzvah are good problems — if you get a pink tablecloth or a purple one, it doesn't matter in the end.

"So many people get so aggravated about the problems, and they need to be reassured. Why can't someone tell them that they don't have to go crazy worrying about seating plans (like I did), that they just have to remember that everybody wants to be with someone they know?"

Lanckton's book tells Bar Mitzvah mothers just that — and gives a lot of other "good, sensible advice," according to the author.

Judiasm has played an important role in Lanckton's life, ever since she was growing up in Detroit, Michigan where "everyone I knew was Jewish except the basketball team." Her husband Van, a Boston lawyer, converted to Judiasm and later became Bar Mitzvah at age 31.

"When Van converted," says Lanckton, "it was an opportunity for me to study again. He was the first adult Bar Mitzvah I knew about.

"I think a Bar Mitzvah is a chance to find out what Judiasm can mean for a family. Life needs great celebrations, and why shouldn't you celebrate what you are? When a child comes of age (13 for a boy, 12 for a girl), why not celebrate it as a Jew? Why should you celebrate the Chinese New Year?

"Being Jewish means celebrating life's events with rituals and ceremonies that have had meaning for centuries. The Jewish people brought monotheism and ethical prinicples to a pagan world. They are an ancient people who have always been concerned with ethics and an intelligent, joyful appreciation of God's world. I think it's terrific to be Jewish," she says.

Her love of Judiasm and the Bar Mitzvah celebration comes through in The Bar Mitzvah Mother's Manual, which is written, says Lanckton, "just like I talk." Indeed, many of the paragraphs were inspired by conversations.

For example, one of the paragraphs in chapter 15 ("Family matters: more than ever"), was inspired by a trip to the movies. Lanckton remembers a couple sitting behind her in the theatre who had flown from Seattle for their granddaughter's Bat Mitzvah. Their son, divorced from his wife, did not attend the Bat Mitzvah, and as a result the couple was not invited to the family gathering after the service.

"I put in two paragraphs for them," says Lanckton. In chapter 15, she advises, "Go out of your way to be tolerant of the grandparents on the other side. It's their day, too, and they deserve some pleasure and pride in it."

Lanckton plans to promote her book at the New Yorkers Book Country Book Fair, and she hopes to have a book-signing session at a local store.

"I think The Bar Mitzvah Mother's Manual should serve a very specific need," she says. "I hope it helps special needs children," such as the blind and deaf who want to celebrate coming of age, she adds.

After planning one Bar Mitzvah, writing the book, and preparing for a second Bar Mitzvah next fall, Lanckton may be considered an expert on the topic. Or, as she says in the book, she is "some kind of Bar Mitzvah addict!"

Public Works head defends stoneseal

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Problems caused by the stoneseal paving process are not as serious as they've been portrayed in the media, according to the Department of Public Works (DPW) commissioner.

"I think this issue is blown totally out of proportion," Commissioner James L. Hickey said last week.

Hickey was responding to the criticisms of some aldermen and residents of five Auburndale streets. They have repeatedly debated the merits of the stoneseal resurfacing process with Hickey, who has yet to agree to cover their streets with asphalt.

The residents have been complaining for months that their streets are oozing black, sticky tar that gets tracked into their homes.

They have brought aldermen samples of the stone and tar mixture that has come loose from their streets. As Hickey spoke yesterday, a plastic bag containing some of the controversial substance sat in one corner of his office.

"I am not saying that this may not be aggravating to a particular homeowner or that there are not real problems," Hickey said.

But someone visiting any of the five Auburndale streets — Regina Road, Regina Terrace, Ware Road, Winona Street and Kaposia Street — would have a hard time seeing the trouble spots," he said.

"If one would read the newspapers, one would get the impression this is a major problem," Hickey said.

Some members of the aldermanic Public Facilities Committee criticized Hickey for not letting them and residents know he could not attend a meeting on the issue Tuesday night.

But Hickey said that the committee never checked to find out if he could be there.

He was on vacation when members set the meeting date and later found out that his attendance was required by reading a news article the day before, he said.

"To set a meeting date (without telling) the star of the show, it tends to be a little loose," he said of the aldermanic criticism.

By the time he had learned of the session, he had a family commitment he could not break. He first tried to reach Public Facilities Chairman George Mansfield and later did get in touch with Alderman William Shaevel.

"They didn't even check or ask," he said of committee members. "There's no department head who's more accessible."

The commissioner defended his decision to monitor the five streets in question rather than order an immediate asphalt resurfacing. The city's Engineering Department has on three occasions inspected the roads and concluded such an operation is not necessary, he said.

"If a particular street or streets has continuing problems — problems from an engineering point of view — we will resurface," he said.

Some aldermen have threatened not to approve any DPW requests until Hickey agrees to resurface the streets. The committee made good on that threat Tuesday by refusing to vote funding to improve the traffic signals at the intersections of Rumford Avenue, River Street and Lexington Street.

Members would not listen despite the plea of Assistant Public Works Commissioner Nunzio Piselli's that signals there are old and the traffic has increased significantly.

Hickey criticized their refusal to vote on the project, saying each DPW request should be judged on its own merits.

"I would not consider it responsible to hold up any necessary project that would enhance public safety for no other reason than to achieve a nonrelated goal," he said.

Backman puts focus on handicapped board

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — State Sen. Jack Backman wants to give more manpower and muscle to the Architectural Barriers Board (ABB), which is responsible for ensuring buildings are accessible to the disabled.

Backman, D-Newton, has filed a bill that would increase the budget and staff of the ABB. "It's one of my goals for this year that the bill become law," said Backman, who will retire next January.

The legislation would add at least $30,000 to the ABB's annual budget and enable it to hire more staff. The board's two employees and seven members now investigate charges that any new privately constructed building and municipal facility is not accessible.

Under the state's Architectural Barriers Code, the disabled have to be able to enter and use any building constructed or substantially renovated since 1974.

This can include anything from installing ramps so people restricted to wheelchairs can get into a building or onto a sidewalk to providing easily usable restroom facilities.

The ABB has had to study and hold hearings on an increasing number of complaints, even though its funding and staff have remained the same for years, according to Debbie Ryan, the board's administrative assistant.

In fiscal 1985, the ABB received only 30 complaints statewide, she said. The total jumped to 161 in fiscal 1986.

Jason Rosenberg, chairman of the local Mayor's Committee on the Environment of the Handicapped, said Backman's bill is much needed. "Anything that would put more teeth into the ABB would be good," he said.

Lack of competitive bidding stalls access for handicapped

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city's plan to make 10 public school buildings accessible to the handicapped has been snagged by a lack of competitive bidding for the project.

Previous attempts to solicit bids for the work drew no responses and a third bid opening held yesterday yielded a proposed price of $198,675 or about $116,000 more than the city's estimate.

"Everything is in limbo," said Community Development project Manager David W. Jackson. "Right now, we don't have a successful bidder for it."

Federal regulations require the city to make public buildings accessible or risk losing federal funds.

A half-dozen contractors were sent specifications for the project, but only Fraser Engineering Company Inc., of Newtonville, submitted a certified bid.

Jackson said contractors are in the midst of a busy construction season, making them reluctant to seek new work or offer competitive prices.

He said firms also may be reluctant to pursue the accessibility project because it involves many different types of construction requiring a variety of skilled subcontractors.

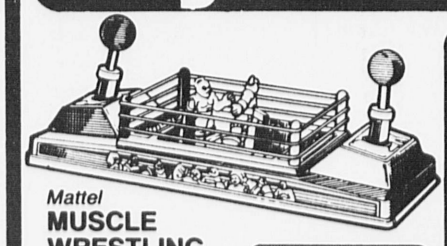

The effort requires the removal of architectural barriers at the ground-floor entrances to the schools and in first-floor toilet facilities, as well as the construction of ramps, railings and wide doorways.

The two junior high and eight elementary facilities targeted for the work are Brown Junior High, F.A. Day Junior High, and the Bowen, Mason-Rice, Cabot, Horace Mann, Franklin, Burr, Pierce and Williams elementary schools.

The project, which will be financed by the Community Development Block Grant program, was scheduled for completion next month.

Jackson said he will consult with Purchasing Agent Blair Kanbar and check the pertinent federal regulations to see what options are available to the city now.

Section of Elm Road slated to close

NEWTON — The Traffic Commission voted, although not unanimously, to temporarily close off the middle portion of Elm Road adjacent to Newton North High School for 45 days after heated debate between residents and school administrators last week.

Residents, along with Alderman Elaine Gentile, claim this action will make the road safer and reduce the number of speeding cars that go through the neighborhood.

The plan calls for converting Elm Road from a one-way to a two-way road and moving the school buses' loading and unloading point to Hull Street above the stadium because there would not be enough room for the buses to turn around on Elm Road, all effective Labor Day.

A sub-committee appointed by the commission recommended in a 2-1 vote to close the road on a trial basis and to monitor the traffic effects the plan might have Capt. John Bartinelli from the Police Department cast the dissenting vote.

The commission's motion for the trial closing gave the fire and police departments the option to suspend the plan at their discretion if they believe it poses a safety hazard.

Commission member and Director of Planning and Development Barry Canner said a meeting is scheduled for Sept. 16 which will give the commission a chance to review what effects the plan is having.

Mayor previews 15th annual address

NEWTON — When he delivers his 15th annual state of the city address Sept. 15, Mayor Theodore D. Mann will stress one of his most ambitious and expensive programs.

At his weekly press conference, Mann said the speech will feature the city's continuing five-year capital improvement program. The Board of Aldermen has appropriated $3.1 million to pay for the most recent installment.

The plan is designed to improve existing city facilities and is projected to cost $80 million, based on projects currently identified. The city will fund the program both by budget appropriations and bond authorizations.

The major portion of construction will be public works related items totaling $45 million, including the proposed sewer maintenance project as well as street and water drainage repairs.

The plan also includes $16 million for municipal building maintenance and $12 million for School Department facilities such as fixing roofs and installing new heating systems.

Mann has described the Capital Improvement Program as a "blueprint for the city's transition into the 21st century."

Alliance for Mentally Ill cites hospital

NEWTON — Newton-Wellesley Hospital recently received an award from the Alliance for the Mentally Ill of Massachusetts Inc., "in grateful recognition for its outstanding support and contributions, 1982-1986" to the care of the mentally ill.

The award presentation took place at the annual meeting of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill July 3 through 6 in Boston. Over 1600 alliance members attended.

The alliance is an organization of families and friends of persons with long-term mental illness.

It links over 600 local and state affiliates in an effort to promote and provide self help groups; knowledge and research about causes, symptons and treatment of mental illness; information about professionals willing to work with families; and educatiuon to change stereotypes, dispel myths, and overcome the stigma associated with mental illness.

City to receive human service grants

NEWTON — The recent restoration of federal Community Development Block Grants (CDBG) will mean an additional $316,000 for city human service and neighborhood programs.

The money, which was originally axed from the federal budget by the president, will be used for projects that were cut from the city budget, according to Director of Community Development Stephen Gartrell.

The restoration of funding, Gartrell says, will mean an additional $45,000, which was originally sliced from the budget, for the city's human services programs. The balance, he says, will go to "projects in the neighborhood that were cut because of a lack of funding."

The Housing Rehabilitation Administration, the Housing Development Funding Pool and the Housing Development Administration will receive an additional total of more than $12,000.

The Human Services Funding Pool and the Human Services Contingencies will receive a combined $47,000 more than what was allocated by the city prior to the restoration of CDBG funds.

In addition, the restoration will enable the city to allocate funding for six neighborhood programs that would otherwise have not received any money.

Newton North roof awaits repairs

NEWTON — Funding to fix the 13-year-old roof at Newton North High School may be put on hold until September because the Public Facilities Committee says it needs more information on construction plans.

Chairman George Mansfield said the committee does not have sufficient information to recommend appropriating the $664,000 needed to repair deteriorating sections of the roof.

Public Facilities, which must deliberate the project before it is passed onto the Finance Committee, is not scheduled to meet again until Sept. 8.

Before the committee's July 7 meeting, members were presented with booklets outlining the project. The report recommends installing an asphalt, built-up roof.

Alderman Joshua Davidson said there are two other types — pitch and rubber — that could be used. Each has its own advantages and disadvantages, he has said. But Cameron said the type of roof recommended has a good record in the area.

The project calls for replacing 47,545 square feet of the fourth floor classroom roof, as well as the library and auditorium roofs. The gym roof needs only to be repaired.

The city can proceed with the bid process even though aldermen have not appropriated funds, Cameron said. The city, however, cannot select a contractor until the funds are approved, he said.

Board of Aldermen approves scofflaw prevention law

NEWTON — Parking scofflaws in the Garden City will face an additional $5 fine if they do not pay within 21 days.

Aldermen this week passed a step-fine parking ordinance. The measure, which will tack on the additional fine for overdue tickets, was passed despite concern about the record of the company hired to collect and process the fines.

According to court records, former employees of Datacom Inc. have been indicted by the U.S. Attorney's Office in New York City for their part in an alleged parking scam involving city officials.

Proponents of the step-fine ordinance said it will increase revenues by forcing violators to pay or face possible non-renewal of licenses and registrations. But for the city to accomplish that it had to hire an outside agency to collect and process the tickets.

Mayor Theodore Mann has defended his selection of Datacom by pointing to a condition of the contract that allows the city to terminate if the company is indicted. But Alderman Richard McGrath criticized the mayor's logic.

"We didn't pick the MMA because they had no experience," he said, "and we picked Datacom because they did. What happens if Datacom is indicted? Where will that leave the city?"

Cable pirating no local threat

By Tom Middleton
Correspondent

WALTHAM — Local cable operators say they are not overly concerned with the threat of program pirating by bars, an issue now before the U.S. District Court in Boston.

Four Quincy bar owners are being sued for allegedly using satellite dishes to recieve sports channels without paying for the service, according to court documents.

Managers for both Continental Cable, which serves Watertown and Newton, and Waltham Telecommunications, serving Waltham, said they were not aware of any satellite dishes being used to avoid paying for cable service.

Telecommunications Assistant Manager Gerry Buckley said the company does not have an enforcement policy because the satellite signal belongs to the channel operators such as the New England Sports Network (NESN).

"We merely distribute the signal on cable after we have received it," Buckley said. "Basically, it's my belief that the channels are vigilant about checking for satellite dishes."

The Quincy case alleges that the bar owners intercept the satellite signal before it reaches the cable company for distribution.

Continental Area Manager Jim Sedgewick said his company doesn't search for satellite dish users. "If there are people or businesses using dishes, that's something the channel operators would have to take up with them. It's certainly something that we would be interested in, but we aren't actively searching for it," he said.

All of the bars surveyed in Waltham, Newton and Watertown either paid for cable sports channels or did not subscribe to cable operations.

"In a way, the bars would be better off going through the cable company rather than buying a dish," Buckley said, "because once the signal is scrambled it will not be economical to have a dish."

Both Buckley and Sedgewick agreed that the kind of satellite dish use named in the lawsuit will decrease as more channels scramble satellite signals. Scrambling allows only cable companies or other businesses with decoding devices to receive a clear broadcast.

In discussing the Quincy case, Buckley said, "I think it's pretty obvious that the services provided by NESN and the Sports Channel cost a hell of a lot of money. I think common sense would dictate that it's worth something. I think common sense says that they are wrong."

Green light for greenhouse project

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Construction will begin next week on Newton Cemetery's $1 million greenhouse project.

The proposed Commonwealth Avenue facility, consisting of a new greenhouse and a vehicle storage and repair barn, has met aldermanic requirments for being unobtrusive, according to Newton Cemetery Executive Officer Michael Kesbin.

The requirements were added to the board order allowing construction of the site because of neighborhood concern over its effect on the area.

Alderman Susan Basham, who served on a subcommittee created to investigate those concerns, said they have been addressed.

"The neighbors were primarily concerned with the visual impact on the area," she said. "Newton Cemetery agreed to provide trees and landscaping to buffer the site from the neighbors."

In addition, Basham said cemetery officials have agreed to sell the 82,000-square-foot parcel of land in Four Corners that now serves as the greenhouse facility.

Kesbin said the cemetery has an agreement with a residential developer, but would not specify the developer, when the site will be built on or the type of housing to be developed.

Under the board order allowing construction of the new facility, cemetery officials agreed to convert the land to a residential district because Four Corners residents did not want commercial development in the area.

She added that after several meetings between residents, aldermen and cemetery officials, the neighborhood "is pretty satisfied" with the designs by architect Doug Okun.

Kesbin said after more than two years of work on the project, he is glad it is near fruition.

"We're pretty excited," he said. "This will be a very well-designed structure. It will not detract from the neighborhood."

The new facility is needed, he added, because of a lack of space.

Despite the earlier controversy, Okun said cemetery officials have taken neigborhood concerns to heart.

"They were first class all the way," Okun said of Newton Cemetery officials. "A lot of developers only have the bottom line as a priority. These people have the public."

Okun says the greenhouse complex will be completed in about six months.

Fields renamed to laud citizens

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

NEWTON — In separate ceremonies last Tuesday and yesterday, Parks and Recreation Commissioner Russell J. Halloran unveiled signs dedicating the Newton Highlands Field to Howard Whitmore Jr. and the Softball Field at New Cold Spring to C. Evan Johnson.

Howard Whitmore, Jr.

Whitmore, 81, is known for his abilities as both a baseball player and a politician.

As a pitcher and two-year captain for the Newton High School varsity squad, Whitmore exhibited great skill and leadership. He also played varsity baseball at Harvard University. After his graduation in 1929, he continued to pitch, often at the field now named in his honor.

In 1941, Whitmore started his political career when he was elected to the Board of Aldermen. After a four-year stint in the Air Force during World War II, Whitmore served three terms in the House of Representatives.

In 1953, Whitmore was elected mayor, and served in that position for three consecutive terms. He later accepted the appointment of head of the Metropolitian District Commission and was a member of the Recreation Commisssion in Newton.

"This sign and dedication will be a reminder of Howard's complete dedication and service, not only to his country, his state, and his city, but to his community as well," said Wendell R. Bauckman, president emeritus of the Board of Aldermen, at last Tuesday's ceremony. "He was a mayor of complete and colossal excellence."

C. Evan Johnson

Last night, the Recreation Department honored C. Evan Johnson, making the Softball Field at New Cold Spring the 13th park/playground area dedicated to a distinguished citizen.

Johnson taught history at Newton High School for many years. In addition, he was the assistant football coach and head hockey coach.

Following his years at Newton High, Johnson served 15 years as Recreation Commissioner. A volunteer with many youth groups including Newton North Little League, Johnson is still an active resident interested in youth sports and recreation.

He is also proud of his involvement with his church, where, he says, "I have made many young friends."

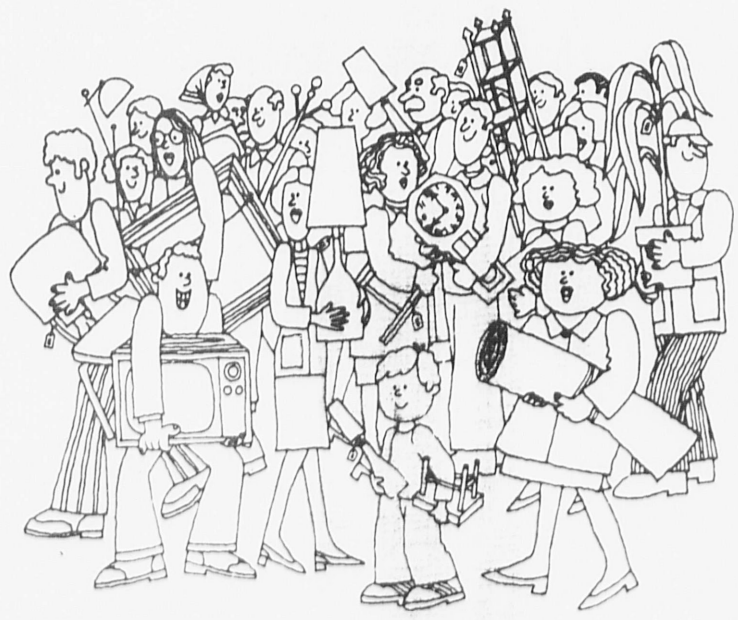

In a letter to Halloran suggesting the dedication, resident Gordon R. Garrow said, "Through the years I have come to know Evan Johnson and have been impressed by his integrity and dedication to the ideals of sportsmanship and the best interests of our youth."

"This would be a fitting tribute to him," he continued, "as I'm sure there are still those in the city who know and respect him."

Insurers reach for the moon

Call it arrogance or greed, or both, if you will. The word used most in response to the auto insurance industry's request for a 33.7 percent increase in rates was "outrageous" and indeed it is. Underwriters have gone far beyond anything sought in the past, perhaps on the theory the ultimate decision by Commissioner Peter Hiam will be be substantial.

Each of the past two years saw the rates drop, a 2 percent dip in 1985 and less than 1 percent in the current year. Three years ago, the industry asked for 11.3 percent and settled for 4.6 percent. Justification for the state's hold down on the premium charges allowed wasn't difficult to find.

Stricter enforcement of the drunk driving law, broader safety education, the seat belt law and deductibles favoring the insurers have had a favorable effect on the accident record.

Although we're still seeing a lot of those horrible highway crashes taking a toll in lives and totally wrecking cars, abundant evidence exists that the large-scale attack on bad driving habits is paying off. How this has reduced settlements on the part of the insurance companies has to be the important factor in determining 1987 rates.

In filing such a rate demand, the industry says it will be ready to back it up with figures when Commissioner Hiam conducts the hearings required by law. A spokesmsn's statement said Hiam had underestimated, by more than a half million dollars, the amount that insurers have had to pay for injuries and damages from autobmobile accidents in the past two years.

What is needed here, it would appear, are some hard facts on the financial situation. Fuller disclosure, not only to the commissioner, but to the public as well, could resolve what had been a puzzling fiscal picture. What happens to the huge amount of money collected by the companies and the amount of return from investment has never been clearly set forth. Granted there probably is nothing as complicated as the money mix involved, an independent audit could well bring out a valid analysis. If this supports industry contention, then any claim would be more credible.

Source of the 33.7 premium boost placed with Hiam is the Massachusetts Automobile Rating and Accident Prevention Bureau. This body is sponsored by the industry, so its findings obviously reflect insurer desire. Something more objective is needed, particularly when the secretary of consumer affairs, Paula Gold, is convinced the request is a "ridiculously high filing." Stay tuned for more precise information.

Rehnquist doesn't measure up

President Reagan's nomination of William Rehnquist for the highest judicial post in the land falls short of the objectivity one should get from a leader with no political plums to pick. Choice of a chief justice transcends the conservative-liberal standoff. It is a poor way to perpetuate ideology.

As a presidential candidate, Rehnquist couldn't push his way past Tusacaloosa. Charisma he has not, as those evasive Senate hearing apperances demonstrated.

He came across as a person with too much to explain in a record which often found him out of touch with social justice. His reticence to clearly state a position was disturbing. It seemed clear he was disdainful, even contemptuous of Democratic opposition putting him on the spot. Some saw a bit of the old Nixon liability that stamped him as a devious person.

Since Senate approval was anticipated, the voting strength being with the administration, all of this kind of exposure and analysis might seem pointless. Democrats, led by Sen. Ted Kennedy, were acting responsibly in putting him under the microscope, despite such a certainty. A lack of concern for minorities, ignorance of personal property deeds with restrictions. delayed acceptance of school desegregation, on-site challenges of minority voters at polling places were among the darts fired at the nominee by the opposition. Reasonable doubts were raised.

William Rehnquist is not a candidate for elective office, so the exposure directed at him by the merciless tube can be discounted to some degree. Yet here is an appointive position of the gravest importance relating to the nation'sfuture. In a chief justice, we should be looking toward the keenest of legal minds, fairness, an overview of the national imperatives and an appreciation of the U.S. Constitution as a document intended to respond to the ever-shifting pattern of American life.

In no way does Rehnquist embody the high ideals and impeccable credentials which the public deserves. He qualifies only in the narrowest technical sense.

Gov. bullying the regents

By Loring Swaim

The Board of Regents of Higher Education is skating on thin ice.

Back in 1980, the board was constituted by the legislature as a quasi-independent lay agency to coordinate the affairs for 27 previously autonomous institutions of public higher education — universities and community and state colleges, with a $600 million budget, 15,000 employees and 180,000 students.

The only role bestowed on the governor, under the separation of powers, was to appoint the Regents with staggered terms, to designate the chairman and annually to recommend a lump-sum higher-ed budget.

For some reason, Gov. Dukakis has taken it upon himself to bend the board to his will.

Last month he vehemently disapproved of its choice for chancellor. Saying it looked bad, he disingenuously blasted the "process," rather than Rep. Jim Collins, the one chosen. He promptly replaced the chairman with a logical no-nonsense newcomer and replaced three regents whose terms expired with new appointees sharing his views.

The reconstitued board voted dutifully last week — 9 to 7 — to do the governor's bidding. They agreed to re-interview the four finalists from the previous "search," condescending to add Collins to the list if he wished (it's the fair thing to do"). They even tempted Collins with a golden parachute should he lose the job. He declined.

The new board is, in effect, retracing the earlier board's steps — considering four finalists plus Collins (who was fifth).

If the original "process" was wrong, why is the identical process right? Is the difference that Dukakis is calling the shots?

To rekindle their interest, new chairman Ed Lashman said he'd contacted and promised the original four finalists he could probably meet their steep salary-and-perks requisites. This is presumptuous. Setting the chancellor's salary is a legislative prerogative and, at the moment, legislative hair is bristling.

(Collins volunteered pointedly he felt salary should not be the paramount criterion for accepting the post. There's a certain Spartan kind of selfless public service expected in so high a calling, he suggested.)

What Dukakis has done with the Regents is, in effect, to invite an unnecessary square-off between the executive and the legislative branches.

For one thing, it never was legislative intent that the Chief Executive should run public higher education unilaterally. For another, treating a competent legislator like Collins so shabbily has insulted rank and file legislators, to say nothing of the leaders.

Already, there are rumors the seven minority Regents may resign enmasse in protest. Taking cue, House and Senate could, in the extreme, reorganize the board and remove the Governor's power of appointment.

What's missing in this whole scene is intellectual honesty and the long view. You can't get any of the Governor's people to be candid about what they have against Collins. Do they think he hasn't the experience to administer a sprawling bureaucracy (Dukakis learned on the job, if memory serves)? Do they quarrel with his priorities? Do they fear Collins' independence, with the Westfield scandal brewing? Does the Governor resent a younger man upstaging him with greater passion about education?

They shamelessly accuse the prior Board of "wiring" its selection of Collins, even as their master electricians "wire" the new board to unselect him.

This is not to say the legislature has been blameless; far from it. Or that Collins is the best possible chancellor in the country.

But the Chief Executive has painted himself into a corner, adamantly and needlessly denying Collins a chance to show his stuff.

Eventually, saner heads may prevail. The Governor may be big enough to back off, release his Regents from the committment, take the long view and give Collins a fair deal. For all we know, Collins could be an inspiration.

But he agrees with Dukakis

By Edward F. King

I may check with my doctor after finishing this column. For some reason I have this urge to praise Governor Dukakis and to support his actions regarding the removal of former Representitive James Collins as Chancellor of the State Board of Education. Why anyone would object to what the governor has done is a total mystery to me.

Think about it. The Board of Regents set up a search process.

They received dozens of applications. After a careful winnowing process, they narrowed their list to four highly-qualified professional educators. Conspicuously absent from the abbreviated list was James Collins.

Unfortunately, when a final vote was taken, a deadlock occurred and none of the four finalists could muster a majority vote. In a highly political move, it was suggested that new nominations be allowed. The name of James Collins was thrown into the pot and received a majority vote.

Now we must ask ourselves what really happened. Was it the marvelous educational background that Collins possessed? If so, why was he not a finalist?

Or, was it the political skills and good old boy connections that brought Collins to his $65,000 per year upset victory?

This writer believes that it was the latter. Jim Collins was the Chairman of the Committee in the House of Representitives that oversees Higher Education. As such, his chief claims to fame were two-fold.

First, he voted in lockstep for every spending request of the education lobby. No boondoggle was too great, no mimimum salary demand too high, no research request too outrageous. What the educators wanted, they got.

Secondly, he distinguished himself by appearing on the lobbyists' reports as the most expensive Rep. on Beacon Hill. He was wined and dined at the finest establishments. All during "business meetings" of course. Lunches, dinners, wine, and roses. On a daily basis.

The question became too obvious. Why Collins? And who would he represent as Chancellor? The taxpayers? Or the people who had been feeding him at the Ritz?

Governor Dukakis stuck his neck out (and his chin) and said "no." Enough. He angered Speaker Keverian and enraged the education lobby. But he was dead right.

Someone take my temperature. I believe that I agree with the Duke!

Graphically speaking

Congressman Barney Frank, D-Newton, displayed his trademark caustic wit during a recent press conference to announce his re-election campaign.

First, he suggested a "futility play-off" featuring representatives of the Massachusetts Republican Party and officials from the Democratic Party in Illinois, who somehow ended up with two followers of ultra-conservative Lyndon LaRouche on their statewide ticket.

Next on the receiving end was the President, of whom Frank said, "Ronald Reagan's practice is that once a Democrat has been dead for 10 years it's okay to say how great he was."

A quiet nod for $2 billion

By Loring Swaim

The Reagan administration, it has been learned, has quietly agreed to 90-10 federal funding for the controversial $2+ billion project of depressing Boston's clogged Central Artery and snaking a traffic-relieving third harbor tunnel to Logan Airport.

Indeed, some announcement or formal groundbreaking may take place within two weeks — before congress recesses.

The quiet assurance comes as a surprise to those who doubted the Reagan administration would hand a politcal plum to one of its severest critics — Gov. Michael Dukakis who fathered the grandiose project. Speaker Tip O'Neill tried with limited success to push it on the administration.

There has been scuttlebutt that a deal was struck with the White House. O'Neill would get his cherished enlarging of the artery in return for gettin $100 million in military aid to the contras in Nicaragua.

"That's 100 percent wrong," says a close monitor of the issue. "That's inside the beltway's anecdotal cocktail gossip. It is not part of a political deal. It's going forward on its merits."

All sorts of politicians are expected to claim credit for tipping the scales towards this huge dual engineering project. Dear to Democratic hearts, it is considered the biggest single Interstate highway package in the country.

"Starting with technicians and engineering calculations," says this source authoritatively, "it was found to be feasible technologically and essential to the economical survival of the region.

"From top to bottom, officials believe it will work and is the right answer. It's going to happen. There's nothing Byzantine about it."

If so, there's a miracle.

The plan is, according to a qualified source, for GOP gubernatorial candidate George Kariotis to run on stickers in the September 16 Republican primary — and if possible, win the party nomination in his own right.

Accordingly, in the near future, letters will go out to some 250,000 Republicans across the Commonwealth. It will enclose an explanatory letter and a packet of gummed stickers bearing Kariotis' printed name. Also a card, signed by both Hyatt and Switzler, pledging to refuse the nomination should either happen to get the most votes.

In which event, Hyatt and/or Switzler would reiterate their withdrawal and the state committee would fill the vacancy with Kariotis.

If this sounds complex, it is.

The Republican hierarchy has been racking its brain for weeks looking for a legal way of switching Kariotis for Hyatt/Switzler. The latter two early hopefuls shot themselves in the foot and withdrew their candidacies — but too late in the election cycle to have their names stricken from ballots (now being printed and, in the case of absentee ballots, distributed).

Politicians are expected to claim credit for tipping the scales towards this project.

In the strange circumstances, a GOP search committee settled on Woburn businessman Kariotis as relief hitter. But how to make the switch? And how to insulate it from inevitable Democratic court assaults?

The prevailing doctrine seems to be to let Republican troops be engaged as much as possible actively in picking Kariotis as their standardbearer in the primary. They should positively affix his sticker to a ballot — or write in his name — to show they understand the situation and want him.

If things screw up and somehow Hyatt or Switzler gets more votes, either will withdraw. Bylaws then empower the state committee to nominate Kariotis. No one expects Hyatt or Switzler to defy reason and stubbornly refuse to quit.

This is deemed more invigorating to the party and straightforward than encouraging everyone to vote for Hyatt or Switzler by way of voting for Kariotis.

Marriage means jockeying for space

By Mark Patinkin

There are two ways for a male to tell that he's just been married.

One, he has better dishes.

This second sign is the most significant one. It symbolizes the first true phase of marriage: jockeying for space.

Psychologists will say that the biggest adjustments of marriage have to do with reconciling to lost childhood, altering self-concept and embracing life commitment.

It's not. It's who gets the closets.

This is especially hard for people who spent a long time single. I was 33 when we got on with it, Heidi was 29 and we'd both become accustomed to not having someone else around to drop underwear on the floor and fill the refrigerator with Tupperware containers whose contents can't be identified because of mold.

Last May 10, that changed.

Around noon on May 11, I came downstairs to find 73 magnets holding notes to the refrigerator. That's when I first learned she was a magnet person.

It was easy to make that concession — although 13 magnets fall off every time I open the door — but the upstairs guest room was much tougher.

I'm an old-newspaper person. Some people save stamps, I save old newspapers. You never know when you'll need to reread page B-11 of the May 3, 1979, issue. By rough count, my upstairs guest room had 2,120 newspapers in it. This was the room I offered Heidi as a study. I tried to point out that if she sawed her desk in half, there would still be space for it in the corner, but it didn't work. She said it was time the newspapers went.

I made the concession but now, three months later, I've begun to make up for it. I'm slowly establishing a new beachhead of old newspapers in the basement. I don't think she knows it yet. That's the point — to take over territory without the other person realizing it. Instead of hearts and minds, marriage becomes a subtle struggle for shelves and rooms.

I know that sounds conniving, but she started it. Females happen to be much better at this kind of warfare than males. There is something about getting married that switches on their space-encroaching genes.

Take our neutral closet. I had the keen vision to create a new closet by having a workman build six shelves into our attic entranceway. It was supposed to be like Berlin — a moral symbol of territorial sharing. Each of us would take three shelves.

I glanced into it the other day. She now has 5.9 shelves. I hadn't even realized it was happening. I suppose it's my own fault. I should have taken evasive action earlier. Heidi is far more frugal than I am — she considers it immoral to call directory assistance — but when it comes to one particular habit, she is the Imelda Marcos of Rhode Island, which is where we live. She owns 43 pairs of shoes. This was to be her shoe closet. I never had a chance.

We'd spent long hours negotiating over drawers. We realized early that two people can always work out personality differences, but if you don't get drawers straightened out, it'll be just a question of time before lawyers get involved.

Anyway, one day a strange cableknit appeared in my sweater drawer. A week later, there was an unidentified cardigan. More followed, and soon, Heidi was complaining that it was my sweaters that were in her way. I made a full retreat and now have to mash them in a different drawer, next to my socks.

Luckily, I have more experience than most men in counter-encroachment activity. It was my main tool of survival as a child. I had four brothers, and soon learned that if you brought home an ice cream bar to eat later and didn't hide it behind the frozen peas, it would be gone in 11 minutes. Females learn to reclaim space through subtlety, men learn to do it by sneaking.

For example, for some reason Heidi doesn't think my long-haired, shedding black dog should get onto our $600 light-colored couch. I tell her I agree. Then, as soon as she leaves the house, I call him up. It's the same mentality with the newspapers in the basement. I really don't need them down there, but I don't feel secure unless I'm furtively getting away with something I've got no business doing.

Ultimately, I'm afraid, these are Pyrrhic victories. A strategic map of the house would show enemy troops everywhere. She's made serious headway in the war of the bathroom shelves. She seems to have already won the struggle for the basement clothesline and front-hall coat closet. The battle of the dresser tops has turned her way, and I'm even losing the main staircase: She keeps putting items on the steps that are supposed to go upstairs but never quite get there.

My most symbolic last stand is in the dining room. In a corner cabinet, I've maintained a beachhead of old camera equipment. I've declared it strictly untouchable.

But now I'm even worried about that. We're expecting some boxes of stoneware and flatware. I'm not sure exactly what stoneware and flatware is, but I think it's what married people call dishes and forks.

Anyway, I doubt I can repulse that kind of invasion. I have a feeling I'll soon have to find a new place for my camera stuff. I'm afraid I can think of only one possible spot. Between my sweaters and my socks.

More mixed housing

Howard Altman's article in the Graphic's July 30th issue states that there are now two mixed-income facilities in Newton, the Weeks House and New Falls.

There are others — The Hamlet, which is mixed income family housing off Langley road in Newton Centre and Golda Meir House on Stanton Avenue which, since 1978, has housed elderly tenants, both market and subsidized under Section 8. Jewish Community Housing for the elderly's experience with income mixing at Golda Meir House has been entirely successful.

A visitor to Golda Meir House cannot tell the low income and the market residents apart — a string of pearls looks lovely whether it is real or pretend. The poker players and the movie addicts are not visibly different based on income. Neither can their apartments be told apart; there is no difference in the apartments rented to the two groups and most of them are good housekeepers, irrespective of income. The friendships that have developed among residents are not based on whether they are or are not subsidized.

The controversy about both income mixing and generation mixing should not be resolved without looking at wider experience that just these Newton developments. Ever since the Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency's establishment in 1966, all housing built with its financing has required that at least 25 percent of the units in every development be for low-income tenants. The deputy director of the MHFA testified to the overwhelmingly successful functioning of these projects at a recent hearing on Boston's proposed Inclusionary Zoning provision.

As to generation mixing, JCHE's experience does not provide us with first hand information. However, many of the management companies we work with, such as Maloney Properties in West Newton, operate successful examples of such housing and should be asked for their experience.

Income mixing remains one of the most successful vehicles for housing those of our neighbors who cannot afford market housing. It creates much needed housing for them; it does so relatively inexpensively; and it does so without stigmatizing the people or their homes.

Our summer playground programs need a savior

Too few Newton parents or children know that the Newton Recreation Dept. runs five free summer playgrounds from June 30 to Aug. 16 or 29 depending on the site. Full-time recreation instructors are paid to teach arts and crafts, sports and games to Newton youngsters from 9 to 4 p.m. each weekday. Most parents do not know this because the Newton Recreation Dept. does not adequately advertise this service as they do their other programs.

Watertown, in contrast, which runs five similar summer playgrounds, advertises each week its counselors availability and publishes a newspaper account, "notes from the playgrounds," describing events of the previous week at each playground.

Unlike the Watertown playgrounds, the Newton playgrounds suffer, we believe from the ambivalence of the Newton Recreation Dept., since, it is said, parents prefer full-time paid camps for their children such as the Albemarle Acres and Newton Centre Camps. Watertown, on the other hand, finds such different facilities not contradictory but complementary, and also runs a day-long pay-camp for its residents.

It is our contention that not all Newton parents can or even want to send their children throughout the whole summer to full-time camps that a need still exists for drop-in recreation sites to help occupy a diverse population of Newton Recreation children through the summer vacation.

This past year the Newton Recreation Dept. cut five and kept five of Newton 10 longstanding playgrounds. But presumably because of a confusion in its policy it tends to tolerate a kind of non-program at the five remaining playgrounds–Auburndale, Burr Park, Hamilton School, Hawthorne and Sterns. Most children who manage to find their way to the sites invitably drift away saying that "nothing is going on". Counselors on the other hand, say that there can be no activities without the kids.

And so Newton finds itself in the awkward position of paying disappointed and bored instructors (up to four at a given site) to pass the time of day as best they can. A decade and more ago, when the recreation program flourished under Chubby Ryan and his father before him in Auburndale, news of sports and games travelled by word of mouth. But the children who benefited from these leaders are now grown and new families have moved into Newton.

It is time for the Newton Recreation Dept. to inform a new generation of the playground services. It should post signs at each site indicating the presence of recreation instruction. (We found children already playing at a playground or living only a few blocks away to be unaware of the program.)

A projected schedule of activities should also be posted at the playgrounds so that youngsters who might be interested in, say a volleyball game or checkers match would known when to appear.

Counselors should be helped to plan activities. (One counselor with whom we spoke said that he had lost a structure around which to organize events when the Newton Recreation Dept. dropped around its use of weekly themes two years ago.) Arts and crafts instructors should be supplied with adequate arts and crafts supplies. (At the Auburndale site this summer crafts supplies arrived one week late and lasted only two weeks.)

The Recreation Dept. should also inform parents early in the year about the availability of this taxpayers-supported service, and like Watertown, insert notices weekly in local newspapers as it does announcing it other supervised activities. (Frustrated parents have tried recently to advertise for the dept., sensing an information gap.)

These changes are simple, but if the Newton Recreation Dept. does not make them, it will not have given the playground programs a chance at life for this generation of Newton's children. No one expects a playground site to have the tightly organized coherence of a paid day-camp. Yet for a Newton youngster not in camp (and, yes, there are still many of them, and even mothers at home), who can measure the value of a single kickball game on a long afternoon or an arts and crafts class with friends at a neighborhood center. For the sake of our children we residents of the Garden City cannot afford to let Newton's last long-established summer playgrounds die in our season.

Appreciation from Camp Echo Bridge

Dear editor:

The counselors and staff of Camp Echo Bridge, a Special Needs camp sponsored by the Newton Parks and Recreation Department, would like to publicly thank the Newton Marriott for inviting us to enjoy an afternoon in their outdoor pool. We were made to feel very welcome by the Marriott staff and the campers enjoyed escaping the heat. All 42 of us had a very fun afternoon.

Thank you again, Newton Marriott, for taking an interest in the community and showing our camp a kindness.

Papa Shep tribute a gem

Re. Papa Shep, Maureen Azzato got it right; the obituary erred. It was grandson Matthew Simon, a pupil of the Angier School, who introduced Papa Shep and his wondrous stories to the children of the Newton Public Schools, not Peter, who is in his 20's and doesn't live in Newton at all.

Kudos to Ms. Azzato, whose fine tribute captured the spirit of that very special man. I'm glad his young friends in our grammar schools were able to read of the love he felt for them all. Their teachers were also very close to his heart.

How to write us

The Newton Graphic welcomes letters to the editor of praise or criticism, suggestions or any subject of local interest.

Letters should be typed, double-spaced, if possible, and bear the name and telephone number of the letter writer for verification.

Telephone numbers will not be published. Unsigned letters will not be published.

Letters should be sent to The Editor, The Newton Graphic, P.O. Box 341, Newton Highlands, 02161.

Experts wrong about families and suicide

Your so-called expert psychiatrist says families need to be told that it is not their fault that teens commit suicide. That is a lie. They may want to believe that it is not their fault, but that is simply not the case.

Pain, anger, frustration, and lack of communication do not appear overnight. Children learn what they live, as the old saying goes. Parents who expect perfection or who simply ignore their children, even though they may not think they do, cause even greater isolation.

I know. I tried to commit suicide on Christmas Day 1982, and you know what, my parents still didn't believe me. I had a friend at the Faulkner Hospital who had to have her stomach pumped because of a drug overdose and her parents accused her of wanting to take a holiday, time off from school, that's why she got herself into the hospital.

Sociologists can say all they want about greater income levels and education. Along with greater income and education comes greater expectations — insane expectations. It is healthy to achieve, but only 1 percent of the population can be the top 1 percent by definition. And even these people cannot always achieve.

I am presently entering my senior year of college at an Ivy League university. I was accepted to three Ivy League schools, including the local one here in Cambridge, though I do not attend there because the healthiest thing for me emotionally was to get as far away from home as possible.

Home was a place where love was a farce because we were all supposed to appear like we loved one another when in reality my parents did not care the least thing about how I felt, only about how I appeared, especially on paper in college applications.

I may sound bitter, but I am not. Life has been better to me since my family has undergone counseling by our local clergyman, and things are getting a little bit better in my family. But mostly I am independent now and can handle adult decisions on my own. I scrambled for self-sufficiency and won.

My only warning is not to dismiss the influence of parents too lightly. A child will do almost anything to please his parents to the point where he would risk self-destruction. "If I can't please them, I'd rather die. No matter what I do, they don't seem to care. They barely even notice me. Sure they say 'Hi' and talk at me, but they never listen to me. At least if I killed myself, maybe they'd notice me and think about me for a change."

An adolescent cannot know all his emotional needs just as a baby does not know it needs diapers. With the increasing complexity of today's world, there grows an increasingly long necessity of the period of nurture which brings with it a longer period of uncertainty when the body is biologically ready to be an adult, but society won't let him yet.

It is up to the parents to open up lines of communication and most of all respect their adolescent for the adult in him or her which is slowly emerging.

I just had to write having been there and back with several friends with me, some of whom have not returned.

I can't sign my name because my parents are still big on appearances, and they would just die if they saw any part of my name in print, but this is a real story. Thank you for your articles on a very real issue.

P.S. If you think it's so painful for the families, think of what the kid is now enduring. Everything depends on how you look at it.

Interlibrary system offered to residents

NEWTON — Interlibrary loans and reciprocal borrowing make it possible for Newton residents to have access to books, films and records not contained in the Newton Free Library collection.

These services are made possible through the library's membership in the Eastern Regional Public Library System.

There is regular delivery service from the Boston Public Library and other libraries in the system to the Newton Free Library.

If the Newton Free Library does not own a particular book that a patron is looking for, the librarian can contact the Boston Public Library.

The Interlibrary Loan Office there arranged week-day deliveries of books, films, records and other non-book materials to more than 130 libraries in the system.

If materials are not available at the Boston Public Library, the Interlibrary Loan Office will send a printout of other libraries that have what the patron is looking for in their collections.

Review list is named

NEWTON — Library Director Virginia A. Tashjian will be reviewing the following books each morning at 9:25 a.m. on local radio station WNTN on the NFL's book corner starting this week.

Billman - "Secret of the Stratemeyer Syndict;" Brownstein - "In a Certain Light;" Cox - "Perennial Garden;"

Gardner - "Stillness/Shadows;" Goodman - "The Last Dalai Lama;"

Green - "East and West;" Harris - "Jean Harris;" Mathiesses - "9-Headed Dragon River;"

City gives pay increase to clerks

McGrath said the pay hike was in reality a cost-of-living increase English deserves as much as anyone.

Most employees rely on their unions to negotiate yearly cost-of-living increases, McGrath said. "Department heads have no unions," he said.

"My particular opinion is the employee was out for a period of time. Gracie (Lennon) had to take over," Coletti said. "She filled in even at a time when she was not physically well herself and she did so admirably."

But Bullwinkle said English will be expected to bear the same extra workload now that Lennon is ill. "Gracie's going to be out with a heart attack," he said. "He's going to have to do the same thing."

Coletti said he has not been pleased with the operation of the clerk's office even though he has tried for months to improve its performance. "You don't continue to throw money at a person and say everything's fine," he said.

Alderman Polly Bryson said it is unfair to criticize the clerk's office because it lacks the resources to solve its problems. "They've gotten in deeper and deeper," Bryson said, "and I don't think we've given them the tools to get out of that."

Unless aldermen are willing to create an evaluation procedure for all its employees, they should not ask English to submit to such a process, McGrath said. "The public part came when we excluded Eddie from everybody else," McGrath said.

Earlier in the discussion, Malec said he would officially submit a proposal calling on the board to create an evaluation procedure for all its employees.

His consultations with some aldermen were not meant to exclude others, Malec said. "I acted in good faith," he said. "I acted in a way that was intended to be totally positive and constructive."

Shick said the issue has become too political. She urged board members to put aside their differences and settle the matter.

"I think it's unfortunate we've gotten into this posture," she said. "Let's try to work together."

"You feel like an outsider when things are being done you don't know about, especially with a president who was going to bring the board together," said Alderman Bruce Carmichael. "That was Mike's theme."

Any group as large as the Newton board will naturally form cliques, said Alderman Wendell Bauckman, who has served more than 40 years and was president for 20 years.

But he added: "I think it's obvious the board has been cliquey, more so now than in the past."

The group now in control ousted Alderman Matthew Jefferson from the board presidency and McGrath from the chairmanship of the Public Facilities Committee in 1983, Carmichael said. "It was a coup," he said.

Members of the new ruling clique espouse what Carmichael called the "politics of the intellectual" and react adversely to dissent and stifle debate he said. They are too sensitive and take votes against their position personally, he said.

"This is a deliberative body," he said of the board. "We're supposed to be banging on tables and getting our points across. Now we have people who are aloof and they resent anyone who has the audacity to dissent loudly and with malice towards an issue."

Board Vice President Elaine Gentile has vehemently denied all charges that Malec held secret meetings or engaged in a conspiracy. But she said there may be some truth in Carmichael's observation.

A large number of aldermen are relatively new to the board and most are educated professionals, she said. The unsettling nature of the times perhaps makes them less willing than their predecessors to engage in verbal donneybrooks, she said.

They want no part of the turmoil that has beset the state and federal governments and the business world and would prefer to settle disputes in a calm, orderly fashion, she said. "Maybe it's a sign of the times."

Coletti, however, feels the problem is too much — not too little — debate. As an example, he cited the deliberations over raising sewer-water rates, which went on for months.

"It has as many as 23 people who feel they want to be personally responsible for every piece of legislation," Coletti said. "It's almost like having 23 mayors."

But, paradoxically, attendance at committee meetings is low and some members may be present for only half their votes, he said. "It's lazy and it's constipated," Coletti said of some members on the board.

The poor attitude of some members can be traced to Proposition 2½, which reduced municipal resources and limited a board's ability to make creative decisions, he said. The municipal tax-cutting measure was necessary, but "it took all the fun out of being an alderman," Coletti said.

McGrath and Bullwinkle believe that the "in group" around Malec has created tension and dissatisfaction for the rest.

Each said there is nothing wrong with cliques in and of themselves. It is that the board's present "in group" has become a majority. "And they don't want it known," said Bullwinkle.

"The problem I have is with the use of power once they get it," McGrath said. "As a result of their relationship, they've formed a group that can now control the Board of Aldermen."

The "in group" has been formed solely for power, he said. Malec added to the "clique's" clout by naming many of its members committee chairmen, McGrath said.

The others have been largely ignored, embittering many of them, he said. Their views — and the needs of their constituents — do not receive equal attention, he said.

While he claims no special desire to be a chairman, McGrath said by virtue of having received more votes than any aldermen in the 1985 election, he should be considered a leader.

But Alderman Verne Vance said McGrath has been spouting the same line since he lost his chairmanship of the Public Facilities Committee in 1984.

"If Alderman McGrath feels excluded there's nothing we can do about it short of naming him president or a committee chairman," Vance said.

He defended Malec's choices for the chairmanships. At least one, Public Safety and Transportation Chairman Arthur Reilly, did not support Malec for the presidency. He, in fact, supported Vance, whom Malec named chairman of the Legislation and Rules Committee.

Both Vance and Malec questioned whether it is possible to form a clique large enough to control a legislative body as large as Newton's board. "The issues are too volatile," Malec said.

The president noted that he often votes against those aldermen who are his closest supporters. As an example, Malec said Rodney Barker "led the charge" to stop the police department from purchasing hollow point bullets, while he supported the request. Philosophically, he is a lot closer to McGrath than he is to some chairmen, said Malec.

A president must consult frequently with committee chairman to keep the board running smoothly, Malec said. But when an issue affecting a particular part of the city arises, he goes straight to the three aldermen representing the ward.

The present board is no more divided than past boards, said Malec. Aldermen have brought attention on cliques simply because they are thinking and talking about them now.

Malec said he will take extra measures to make sure all members feel they have an equal role on the board.

"If for whatever reason — conscious or subconscious — you feel excluded, it's a problem," he said. "To the extent I'm aware of it, I'll take the extra step to minimize it. I would like to think that has generally been my style."

Asked whether the sentence was light, Bella said it was "within the realm" of sentences given for such crimes, adding that it was "on the lighter side."

He said Hawkes's prior criminal record was minimal, with a marijuana arrest and several traffic violations. He also said she was cooperative with police after her arrest.

"Jail time isn't always the answer," said Bella. "Sometimes you try to save jail time for those who really deserve it."

Chapman supported his argument for a suspended sentence by saying that Hawkes has a young child who "needs her mother desperately." He said Hawkes "wants to try to pull her life together."

Hawkes was arrested by Watertown Police at her Perry Street home on April 9. The Newton Police Drug Task Force had been investigating her Endless Summer tanning salon after receiving information that drugs were being sold at the Elm Street establishment.

Instead they found an escort service, advertised in the Boston Phoenix newspaper. Clients calling the service would reach phones in either the tanning salon or in her home on Perry Street in Watertown. Escorts then would be dispatched to area hotels or homes.

Bella said one woman, who worked as a receptionist at the salon and in the Perry Street home, was approached by Hawkes and asked if "she wanted to expand her role in the business and service customers."

Clients were charged hourly rates of $150 if paid by cash, $170 by MasterCard and $180 by American Express, according to the records confiscated by police.

Brooklynites in Boston party

That a Brooklynite should speak of culture is a shock to many, Calmas adds.

"When people hear I am from Brooklyn, they think I am uneducated and have no knowledge of culture," she says. "The real story is that Brooklyn, with its system of free colleges and universities, initiated much of what we now have as a system of higher education in this country.

"A lot of people think people from Brooklyn say deese, dem and doze. They think we ax questions and put earl in the car, but that is only a stereotype," she said.

Snide remarks aside, she says the party will be a celebration of the positive side of Brooklyn.

Like any city with a strong ethnic heritage, Brooklyn is famous for its cuisine. Among items on the party menu will be knishes, Nathan's hot dogs, egg creams, Charlotte russes, Dr. Brown's Cel-Ray soda, and of course, Kosher Dill pickles.

There will be memorabilia from the each of the city's high schools and some artifacts from one of the most famous Brooklyn institutions — Ebbet's Field, home of the Dodgers.

"It was Brooklyn by chance, Boston by choice," she says. "That will be the theme of this party."

Being a non-native has made her appreciate the area.

"When I see all the open spaces here, I really do admire it, because in Brooklyn, we never had this. It is something I think native New Englanders should be proud of."

Her children do not share her love of Brooklyn, she says. They are "dyed-in-the-wool Red Sox fans and love this area."

Though her three sons think Brooklyn is a little flashy and say her "Brooklyn" is showing when she does something they disapprove of, they always ask her to bring back some Kosher Dill pickles from her visits to where she grew up.

Voter registration end nears

No indentification is necessary.

Residents who are unable to leave their home to register may call the city clerk and someone will come to register them. They may later vote by absentee ballot.

Election officials say that registration has been about average compared with past primary elections. Newton Election Commission Executive Secretary Alan W. Licarie said interest in the primary has been low. "There's not that many contests on the ballot. The only contested races you have are for state auditor, Lt. governor, Congress, some state legislative positions and some county positions. There's no big contest for governor. Voter turnout is going to be light."

Election officials even visit nursing homes to register elderly residents.

Enrollment open for religious school

NEWTON — The Rabbi Israel J. and Bernice Kazis Religious School of Congregation Mishkan Tefilia in Chestnut Hill announces the opening of registration for the 1986-1987 school year.

Students in secular school grades kindergarten through two attend the Sunday morning Gan and Mechinah program.

Students in grades three through eight attend classes Sunday morning and Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

The professionally trained staff is supported by a congregation committed to providing educational programs which develop knowledgeable caring individuals, committed to the heritage, traditions and observance of Judaism and the Jewish people in the spirit of the Conservative Movement.

Enrollment is open to those net yet affiliated with a congregation, as well as to member families.

For registration and materials, call the Religious School at 332-7772 or 332-7770.

Program to train Ombudsmen in fall

NEWTON — A federally mandated ombudsman program that provides advocates for the residents of 45 nursing/rest homes in Belmont, Brookline, Needham, Newton, Waltham, Watertown, Wellesley and Weston will be training volunteers during the first two weeks in September.

Ombudsman are trained, certified volunteers who serve as advocates for residents of nursing/rest homes and their families. Ombudsman act as mediators between the resident/family and the state.

The West Suburban Nursing Home Ombudsman Program in conjunction with the Executive Office of Elder Affairs will give a training session to be held on the dates of Sept. 3, 4, 9, 10 and 11 at 38 Chauncey St., Boston.

Nursing home outreach is a non-sectarian, community program sponsored by Jewish Family and Children's Service with partial funding by West Suburban Elder Services.

Community theaters fighting bigger guys

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

WEST NEWTON — Will the coming of the 10-screen movie theater mean the demise of the small community theater? Will the big cinema tracompanies squeeze out their smaller competetors? David Bramante, for one, hopes not.

Bramante is the owner of the West Newton Cinema, a four-screen theater which shows mainly "art films, foreign films, and mature films for adults," he says. He has seen the Newton Center Academy, Newton Corner Paramount, and Wellesley Community Playhouse, among others, fold and be converted to retail stores because they could not compete with the big name cinemas.

"The problem isn't that some theaters have 12 screens," says Bramante. "The problem is that three of the most agressive chains — USA, Showcase Cinemas, and General Cinemas — are located in the Boston and Newton area. It's not surprising that the smaller theaters are shutting up one by one.

"It's really difficult to compete with a powerful chain," he adds. "It's almost as impossible as forming your own West Newton auto factory and competing with the big car companies!"

The West Newton cinema features four films at a time, at prices comparable to the seven-screen Chestnut Hill Cinema (evening shows are $4.50 at West Newton and $5.00 at Chestnut Hill, but matinees are $3.00 at West Newton and $2.75 at Chestnut Hill). One of the problems Bramante has faced is getting first run films to show as soon as the competition does.

"I'm doing everything I can to get the best possible movies," he says, "but often the Nickelodeon gets them first and I have to wait six to eight weeks. When the films are old, there are no more ads for them, and people forget about them."

The West Newton Cinema, which has been a family operation for eight years, cultivates a distinct group of patrons. "Some of the people come from 50, even 100, miles away to see a movie," says Bramante. "We play films you can't see anywhere else — the place has become almost a mecca."

Despite its problems, the West Newton Cinema is holding on.

"We're really committed to it. We're working very hard to get good films," says Bramante. "The manager, Don Worth, is also extremely dedicated." Part of Bramante's dedication is his attention to details — like getting a certain brand of butter to use for the Cinema's popcorn, ranked the best by The Boston Globe.

"The big companies saw all the other theaters close and they figured we would be next," says Bramante. "But we're doing okay. First, we try to survive by making a niche for our theater. Then we try to thrive.

"We're hanging in there, but it's a struggle," he adds. "We're going to stay here as long as we can."

Hospitals look out for tainted blood

Before the AIDS antibody test was developed in 1985, the chances of receiving contaminated blood in a transfusion were about "one in three or four hundred thousand," according to Lansky. Now, she says, the chances are "one in a million."

There is, however, evidence of a possible "window" between the time someone is infected with AIDS and the time he develops enough HTLV-III antibodies to be detected in a blood test, says Lansky. She estimates that this gap is six to eight weeks, during which time "there is a possibility that blood which has been exposed might slip through" the test.

To safeguard against this occurring, the Red Cross gives potential donors a questionnaire and checks the responses to see if there is any indication of exposure to AIDS. The organization also gives each donor a pamphlet describing the "high risk" groups and asks anybody in this category to leave without giving blood.

"I can understand public concern," says Lansky, "but no one should panic."

"The public should be assured that everything possible is being done to give them safe blood," says Dr. George Catsas, chief pathologist at the WalthamWeston Hospital. "The Red Cross uses up-to-date methods of testing and as many safeguards as possible. And people should also know that if they are tested positive they will be offered the best advice and care possible."

The WalthamWeston Hospital was not one of the 29 hospitals notified about the possibly contaminated blood, according to Catsas. Information about the Mount Auburn Hospital in Cambridge was not available as officials refused to comment until the director of the blood bank returns from vacation.

The "Look Back" program will continue, not only in the Northeast Region but across the nation. The Red Cross hopes to trace possibly infected donations back to 1977, when the AIDS antibodies were first detected.

Body Architex memberships honored

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Residents who suffered financial loss because of the recent closing of Body Architex, a health spa in Lower Falls, will be offered honorary memberships at a Waltham fitness center through the end of August if they choose.

Life Fitness owner Glenn Swann said his business cannot afford to honor the full two-year memberships many people recently applied for at Body Architex, but he will give them up to six months free memberships at his center. He said, however, he will have to charge a fee for members initial fitness tests.

"The Gloria Steven's and Women's World businesses that are shutting down left and right are giving the industry a bad name," Swann said. "I'm hoping we can restore consumers' faith in what good health fitness centers can offer."

Body Architex, formerly a Gloria Steven's shop until the company went bankrupt, was shut down last week because of non-payment of rent. Customers who had recently subscribed to two-year memberships were at a loss. Up until the day before the business was closed, two-year memberships were being sold for $195, according to Body Architex employee Stephanie Koontz.

The case is being investigated by the Attorney General's Office. Complainants, who lost money because of the business collapse should call Mim Cole at the Newton/Brookline Office of Consumer Affairs at 552-7250. Cole said the phones have been ringing non-stop regarding this incident. Affected consumers will be sent complaint forms to fill out, and Cole said she is hopeful people will get their money back.

While financial reimbursement would make customers happy, Swann said similar incidents can be avoided if the public is better educated.

He said the biggest mistake a consumer can make is choosing the center with the lowest prices, as was the case with Body Architex.

"It's impossible to run such an operation with any membership charge lower than $100 a year because your overhead is too high," he said. "Most likely, at those prices you don't have a qualified staff or a sound fitness program. So many of these places have teen-agers teaching adults exercises. It's ludicrous."

According to Swann, fitness instructors at any health spa should have degrees in exercise science and nutrition at an accredited college. Fitness centers should also be members of either the Association of Fitness and Business or the American College of Sports Medicine.

Exercise should be perscribed according to a members individual needs and physical capacity. Before beginning any exercise regimen, all members should be given fitness and health evaluations. The center should also keep records of the members progress and physical changes brought about by exercise.

"You don't just throw a person in a room and let them exercise on their own without supervision," he said. "People want guidance. They're certainly paying for it and that's what a qualified staff is for. If you go to the cheapest place, you get what you pay for."

Owners of local fitness centers are trying to pressure the Legislature into regulating the industry with a stronger arm, according to Swann. While the government recently enacted a law that attempts to somewhat regulate the industry, Swann said there is no mechanism to enforce the law as far as he's seen.

The Health Spa Law, effective since January, has made it illegal for any center to offer lifetime memberships and all operations must be bonded for $25,000. Bonding guarantees members reimbursement of their fees if the business closes or moves more than 25 miles away.

The owner of Body Architex had signs posted that her business was bonded and promised her members recourse, but they have received no reimbursements.

"It's just a perfect example of how the law is weak because there's no one there to enforce it. The state seems to jump in after the fact, which doesn't always help the consumer," Swann said. "Something more needs to be done."

Annual apartment hunt is on

By Andrew P. McCloy
Correspondent

The season is upon us. Landlords and realtors beware: college students all over the Boston area have begun to search — some frantically — for apartments.

Rents are higher than ever before, while the number of available apartments is at an all-time low. And some apartment-seeking college students are feeling the crunch.

For local students, the problem is not as severe as in Boston, but landing an apartment in Newton, Waltham or Watertown still can be a stressful and difficult task, according to realtors.

Out of the three communities, Waltham is the only one that has a significant number of apartment-searching students.

Newton, because of its high rents and location, forces students to look for apartments in area communities, according to one realtor.

"Most of the students are graduate students," says Anj Abramowitz of Century 21's Newton office. "Since rents are very high and public transportation is not that accessible, students tend to look for apartments in Brighton or Allston."

The average rent for a two-bedroom apartment in Newton is $700 without utilities, according to Abramowitz. With the student's pocketbook already strained by increasing tuition, the high rents in Newton keep them away, she adds.

"The prices are so ridiculously high that some apartments are not being rented," she says.

In addition, the number of apartments available is extremely low, she says. "Last year at this time we had more listings. Right now, our inventory is quite low. I think one of the factors is that there are more real estate agents (who list apartments) this year than last year."

In Waltham, Brandeis University and Bentley College students appear to be weathering the apartment crunch better than their Boston counterparts.

But, according to one realtor, students in search of an apartment in Waltham have one strike against them because some landlords don't like to have them as tenants.

"We've seen what some of the students have done to apartments," says Susan Wade, rental agent for Century 21 in Waltham, "and you can't blame the landlords for not wanting to rent to them."

A two-bedroom apartment in Waltham, not including utility fees, will cost upwards of $700, according to Wade. The high rent, coupled with the landlords' dislike for students as tenants, can make the hunt for an apartment in Waltham a grueling task.

But this year students have had a relatively easy time finding apartments, she adds. "We have been able to place all students who have come to us."

Watertown, like Newton, does not attract many students because of its skyrocketing rents.

"Once in a great while we'll get a graduate student looking for an apartment," says Ralph Watt, broker for Century 21. "But, by and large, we do not have students looking for apartments."

Since Watertown borders Cambridge, Watt says he is surprised that students aren't flocking to find apartments in the town. "I don't understand why there aren't more students living in Watertown," he says.

A two-bedroom apartment in Watertown will cost anywhere from $650 to $850 per month, according to Watt. In addition, a month's rent for a three-bedroom unit starts around $800 and can soar up to $1,100.

Watts says the number of apartments available in Watertown has increased markedly since last year. He attributes the higher vacancy rate to peoples' refusal to pay outlandish fees for apartments.

"I think there's more opposition to high rents," he adds. "People just aren't willing to pay them."

Chaulk wins ambulance bid

meeting of the fiscal year that the mayor asked us for the money."

Metro was actually the low bidder by some $100,000 over the life of the contract. But Mann argued Metro did not bid on the entire package of options requested by the city, making Chaulk the low responsible bidder and the best candidate for the job.

While no aldermen questioned Chaulk's ability to provide first-class ambulance service, it was not until Tuesday night, after numerous parliamentary moves in the last month, that aldermen upheld Mann's recommendation. The vote, however, was not without criticism.

"There is an odor eminating from this that has come up time and again on contractual matters this city is involved in," McGrath said. "I don't see why we can't wait on this until we find out some more about the process."

Alderman Richard Bullwinkle, who voted for the contract, agreed with McGrath's argument.

"I don't see that holding this will do any good," he said. "But, we have to look at the big picture here. I think that we should set up an oversite committee to look into the bidding process and follow it through the entire life of a contract so we aren't backed into corners like this in the future."

Adding to his argument for an oversite committee, Bullwinkle alluded to the alleged mishandling of the Greater Boston Police Council funds by Timothy Coogan, hired by Police Chief William Quinn.

"You remember Timmy Whatshisname?" Bullwinkle asked facetiously. "We have gotten ourselves into trouble with contractual services before and I think it is time we set up a committee to make sure we avoid things like that in the future."

Roll call on Chaulk contract:

AYE: Barker, Basham, Bauckman, Bullwinkle, Coletti, Creem, Daley, Davidson, Mansfield, Marini, Reilly, Robinson, Shaevel, Shick, Taglienti and Malec.

NAY: Bryson, Carmichael and McGrath.

ABSENT: Irwin, Gentile, Jefferson, Tennant and Vance.

Jewels & Gems

BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY

EARRINGS FOR MEN

Today, it seems almost as likely for a man to wear a diamond stud earring as a woman. To some, this may seem quite extraordinary. Historically, however, this is not the first time that men have worn earrings. In Rome, earrings were more popular with men than with women. Julius Caesar gave this trend a strong fashion push by urging men to wear them. A portrait of Shakespeare shows him wearing an earring. His character, Othello, sported a gold ring in one ear. Pirates, of course, took special fancy to the single earring. The English Macaronis flaunted earrings to shock the Puritans. Charles I went to his execution wearing a drop pearl in his right ear. His death seemed to end the earring fashion for men for a long while.

Earrings are fun, no matter who wears them. Whether they're studs or the hanging type you'll find an impressive selection at CAROL "THE GOLD LADY." And with so many people wearing more than one pair at a time you won't have to make those hard decision of which pair to buy—you can buy them both. You'll get honest values item for item at our store at 109 Dalby St., Newton. See us Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel 332-5935.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark D. Miskin

Brenda L. Considine and Mark David Miskin wed

NEWTON — Brenda Lee Considine, daughter of Carol and Edward Considine of Newton, and Mark David Miskin were united in marriage on the morning of June 8.

Mark David Miskin is the son of Arleen Miskin of Needham and Norman Miskin of Bedford.

Performing the ceremony was the Rev. Jepp Streit at the outdoor garden of the Nicholas in Norwood. A reception followed at the Nicholas.

The bride chose her sister, Andrea Considine, to serve as maid of honor. Attending her as bridesmaids were: Karen Susi, sister of the bride; Doreen Mancini, sister of the bride; Laura Katz, and Mary Fanning.

Serving as flower girl was Sara Wolons, neice of the bridegroom.

The bride is a graduate of Newton North High School. She is presently the administrator of human resources at Interactive Data Corp.

The bridegroom is a graduate of UMass/Amherst. He is presently employed as a salesman for Prior Corporation.

After a wedding trip to Nantucket, the couple will make their home in Millis.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Magerer

Jodi Brenner becomes the bride of Michael Magerer

NEWTON — Pine Brook Country Club was the setting on June 1 for the wedding of Jodi Brenner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart M. Brenner of Newton to Michael Magerer.

Michael Magerer is the son of Marcella Magerer and the late Robert Magerer of Newton.

The bride chose Pamela Brenner to serve as maid of honor. Jamie and Lisa Brenner attended the bride as bridesmaids.

Douglas Cavello served as best man. Ushers were Jeff Devore, Mark Devore and Scott Devore, all cousins of the bridegroom; and Richard Cavello.

The bride is a graduate of Bryant College and is an assistant buyer at Filenes.

The bridegroom is a graduate of Boston University and is a third year student at Suffolk University School of Law.

Local residents become installed at New England Women's Club

SHARON — The annual open membership meeting and installation of the New England Villages' Women's Committee was held recently at the Spring Valley Country Club in Sharon.

Guest speaker Liz Walker, co-anchor of WBZ-TV's "Eyewitness News," sparked a lively question and answer session following her informal talk. Lunch was served at the completion of the meeting.

Among those installed with Mrs. Kogos at the meeting were Honoray Vice President Shirley Widerman of Newton Centre and Vice Presidents Linda Braun, of Arlington; Jean Pearlstein of Newton and Eleanor Samuels of Wellesley.

New England Villages Women's Committee officers from Newton include: Shirley Widerman of Newton Centre, honorary vice-president; Carol Kosow of Newton Centre, financial secretary; Nancy Karp, assistant financial secretary; and Lillian Vash of Chestnut Hill, corresponding secretary. Members of the board of directors include Risa Aronson of Newton, Phyllis Freed of Newton, Joelle Green of Newton Centre, Florence Kaitz Greenberg of Newton, Sylivia Nierman of Newton Centre, Adele Shamban of Waban, and Gladys Wolfe of Newton.

The close to 3,000 member Women's Committee is the major fund-raising arm of New England Villages, Inc., providing facility where mentally retarded adults live and work in a supportive, non-institutional, community environment.

The Village recently completed a new Vocational Center (NEV Industries) in the Hanson Industrial Park, 10 miles from the village, serving both residents and retarded individuals from surrounding communities.

Auto show recalls the muscle car era

By M.E. Murphy

BROOKLINE — Hanging out at hamburger drive-ins in high performance muscle cars, young adults in the cities continuously challenged each other to Saturday night races down that local quarter-mile, that heated up the pavement and passions for speed. During the sixties in Detroit, where the muscle cars originated, the challenges erupted from Woodward Avenue. Closer to home, the Museum of Transportation at Larz Anderson Park in Brookline, offers a taste of top speed thrills from the muscle car era to the gas miserly compact car generation for the 80's.

Located in a 19th century carriage house on the grounds of the former Anderson estate, "Muscle Cars; Power to Burn" exhibits a selection of cars packing hefty V-8 engines capable of speeds faster than a K car could dream of. Spotlighted through the course of the exhibit are weekend auto events on the grounds: T-bird's, Hemi's, Shelby's and Ferrari's, among others, each having their own day to fill the spacious Museum of Transportation lawn, where kids and hot dogs converge.

Kids at the exhibit are awestruck by the muscle cars their parents treasured as teens. Walking through the museum is a trek down memory lane as moms and dads practically smell the burning rubber of the flaming red Hemi Barracudas.

Images of James Dean and Elvis stare at the crowd as they pass the GTO atop checkered flag tiles; back in 1963, GTO became the first muscle car Detroit produced. Precursor to the muscle cars, some years earlier the Chrysler 300 with trunk space to sleep 10, was rockin' and rollin' down the streets.

Rock was the "in thing" during the 60's, as were big block engines in mean street machines. While some visitors reminisce about winged Dodge Daytona's flying down the avenues, others envision Jan and Dean cruising in their fast, yet ill-fated Corvette.

High speed chases in the museum's video room give younger visitors a whizzing behind-the wheel glimpse of muscle car mania, before they head downstairs to hop into the 1970 LeMans convertible climb-in car.

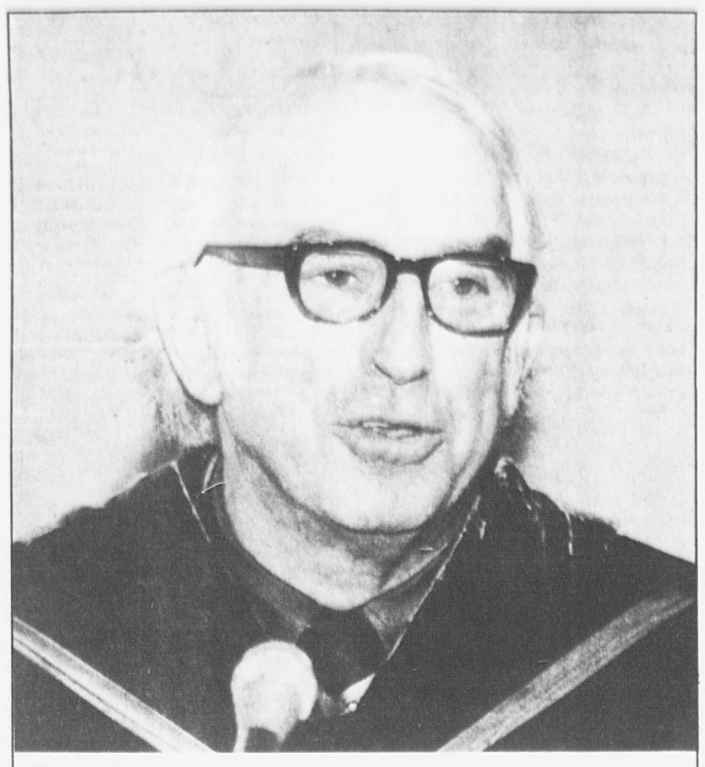

Muscle cars in the exhibit, including the Ford Fiarland GT 390, the zippy, rear-engine Crovair Monza Spyder and the red, white and blue Trans Am Javel in were manufactured when gas was only a quarter a gallon and catalytic converters were unheard of.

The economy was at a high in the cities, allowing young car buyers to have their pick of high horsepower street machines. These shortlived days come to a halt in the early 70's induced by the gas crisis and escalating concerns about ecology. On of the fastest muscle cars from the final days of that era was the Ford Mustang Boss 302; this car is also featured in "Muscle Cars: Power to Burn."

Summer ends just about the same time "Muscle Cars: Power to Burn" closes on August 21 at the Museum of Transportation, but as the muscle cars roll out, a fleet of elegant Mercedes glide in, to celebrate the 100th year of the automobile.

In addition to rotating exhibits, the museum offers picnic space and a gift shop with everything from key rings and Hemming's Motor News to Museum mugs, models and much, much more.

The Museum of Transportation at Larz Anderson Park, 15 Newton St., Brookline, is open Wendesday through Sunday, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is $3 adults and $2 children, seniors and students. Call 522-6547.

Speaker

Dr. C. Allyn Russell, professor of religion at Boston University, will speak at the First Baptist Church in Newton at 10 a.m. All are welcome to attend. Information 244-2997.

Ballet dancer got started in Newton

Mahoney was a runner up in Mr. Dance of America sponsored by Dance Masters of America, and was a guest artist with the Dade County Civic Ballet in Miami during holiday production of "The Nutcracker" where he danced the role of Cabalier.

He began his dance training at the Joanne Langione Dance Center in West Newton. As a scholarship student, he studied with Gus Giordano, in Chicago, Boston Ballet and American Ballet II in New York.

He has also appeared on HBO in "A Salute To Cynthia Gregory." He performed at the "Red Auerbach Testimonial" and "Boston Gold In Concert."

He was principal dancer in Kubla Khan, performed in Boston Shakespeare Theatre in Boston by The Gold Company.

Mahoney grew up in West Newton and attended Newton schools. He is the son of Francis and Marjorie Mahoney.

Learning program gets high grades

NEWTON — "No exams — just pure pleasure!" is Mary Daly's enthusiastic comment about Lifetime Learning. This academic program for Newton Senior Citizens meets on Tuesday mornings at Temple Shalom of Newton and is co-sponsored by Newton Community Schools and the Retired Senior Volunteer Program (R.S.V.P.)

Clarence Lipman, a member of the Lifetime Learning Steering Committee, notes that the program originated about a decade ago because "many elderly people were not interested in craft classes — they wanted to use their minds and express opinions on current matters."

Willie and Dora Impeduglias, regular attendees of Lifetime Learning, add: "Just because we're retired doesn't mean we don't have interests!" Clarence Lipman claims, "Attendees are generally over 60, but are not old people in the true sense of the word. They come out to the programs in any weather."

The original group of 25 students has swelled to 200 in the intervening years, but the progam retains its orientation; learning is a lifelong occupation. Programs are taught by retired professors and other professionals who volunteer their services for the enrichment of the lives of senior adults in Newton.

Mary Waters of Newton is currently taking two courses, "Opera" with Walter Wells, coordinator of the Newton Senior Center, and "Russia" with Philip Hamlin Clendenning, fellow at the Russian Research Center, Harvard University.

"It's hard to choose among the four courses offered each hour; all are wonderful!" claims Edith Grosbayne, an Auburndale resident who has been attending Lifetime Learning programs for two years.

"I look forward to each week and make it a point to come!" says Edith. Currently enrolled in "History of the Christian Churches in the U.S." with Ralph Hergert, she says of the instructor: "He's really something! Terrific! Everybody is crazy about him. I give him an A+!"

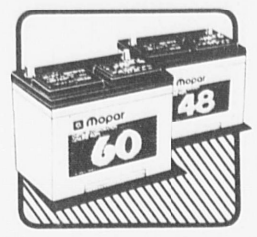

The Lifetime Learning program includes a Poetry Workshop group which will be releasing their third volume of poetry later this month. Bea Branzburg, leader of the poetry workshop, says the program introduced poetry to most of the participants. Some had written before, but fewer than half had tried poetry.

"One of the good things about being old is having so much to remember, so many different kinds of people, flavors of life remembered!" declares Marth Wadman, a poetry workshop participant. "Life is full and retirement is great!" adds Martha McKinley.

Other senior programs sponsored by Newton Community Schools include the Thompsonville Senior Forum, the Upper Falls Senior Activities Series, the Newton Highlands Senior Group and the Oak Hill Park Leisure Group. For more information about any of these programs, all of which meet weekly, call Newton Community Schools at 552-7117.

Container gardening is popular

By Earl Aronson
AP Newsfeatures

Container gardening, which you might call exterior decorating, is growing in popularity, but it's not new.

Among ancient civilizations that practiced it were the Babylonians, Egyptians, Chinese and Romans.

The essence of gardening can be captured in containers. Container gardening opens an opportunity for creating gardens where plants do not ordinarily flourish. With containers, balconies and patios of apartments, condominiums or townhouses sparkle with colorful blooms and usable, edible produce.

Even homes with yards are enhanced by the beauty of filled containers on patios, at the front door or on the deck.

While conventional gardens are at the mercy of the weather, many containers can be moved to shelter when adverse weather threatens susceptible plants. Wheels beneath large containers permit easy movement. If shade from building or trees is a problem, containers can be shifted to sunnier locations.

Containers make gardening a pleasure for more people. No heavy digging and little or no weeding is necessary. Light, soilless planting mixes keep container weights manageable. Container gardens can be brought within easy reach of a weary back, a wheelchair, or a landless gardener.

Much container gardening of the past was devoted to ornamental plants, but with more recent development of compact-growing vegetables and flower varieties, production of these in the limited space of containers is feasible.

Containers of many types are available for growing plants outdoors on porch, deck or patio. For good growth in containers, the insulating value that the container is made from is important. Wood is an excellent material with a high insulating worth.

Containers must provide some insulation for the roots encircling the container to prevent excess heating of the roots when the plant is exposed to the direct rays of the sun for long periods. Wooden boxes and barrels are commonly used since they are relatively inexpensive and provide a good root environment.

Drainage of containers also is important. There should be adequate openings in the bottom, or along the base of the sides so water will not collect, but move freely out during heavy rains.

Soils used in containers should dry easily. The liberal addition of organic matter, such as peat moss, and a porous material, such as perlite, aid both water retention and movement.

Outdoors, containers dry quite rapidly in mid-summer, so frequent watering is necessary. Often, daily watering is required unless containers are quite large or receive rain.

With frequent watering, fertilizers are leached out of the soil more rapidly than they would be in the garden. Fertilization with soluble fertilizers, such as may be used on house plants, can be done at two week intervals. Slow release fertilizers, available in garden centers and nurseries, can provide more uniform nutrition without such frequent doses.

The list of containers that can be used for gardening is long. Here are some suggestions beyond the ordinary:

— An old tire.
— Wheelbarrow.
— Child's old wagon.
— An unused fountain.
— An antique brass umbrella holder.
— A china urn.
— A hollowed-out log or piece of driftwood.
— A wrought iron pot.
— A wooden carpenter's box.
— A picnic basket.
— An antique butter churn.

Keeping your home cool

By Better Homes and Gardens
A Meredith Magazine

There are lots of ways to keep your house cool in the summer without resorting to central air-conditioning.

Windows recessed to a depth that lets the summer sun strike the outside wall above the window prevents heat gain through the glass below, says Better Homes and Gardens Remodeling Ideas.

If recessed windows don't complement your house, plant trees to shade south-facing windows. Deciduous trees shade your house during the spring, summer and fall, then drop their leaves to let the winter sun in. It's also important to shade east and west sides from early-morning and late-evening sun.

While you're waiting for shade trees to grow, consider an old standby — the awning. It can reduce heat gain through windows by up to 75 percent. If you do want to use awnings, buy those you can open and close easily or remove when cold weather sets in.

Overhangs are also effective sun barriers. In northern latitudes, where the sun follows a lower path, an overhang should be slightly deeper than in southern regions. Before modifying the overhangs on your house, consider one disadvantage: Although an installation might block all of the sun past it on Dec. 21, on many other days the overhang will block or allow more sun than desired.

Adjustable overhangs can solve this problem. You can make them out of canvas or slats that can be pivoted to block out the sun. A vine-covered trelis also keeps out unwanted sun in summer yet allows winter heat gain.

Substantial amounts of thermal mass inside your home not only help absorb and release welcome heat in the winter, but they also play an important role during the cooling season. Known as time-lag cooling, this method works well in climates where night temperatures drop into the low 60s.

For best results close up your house during the day so the storage mass can absorb excess heat. At night, open your highest and lowest windows or vents so natural convection can flush the house with cool air from the outside. The air will cool down the termal mass, than exit upward. You can give nature a hand by adding a fan at the high point of the convective cycle.

A forced-ventilation system lowers the temperature in the attic and reduces the amount of heat radiating into your house. To do this, install soffit vents to take in outside air and add ridge vents or gable-end vents as exits for the hotter attic air.

Another option, a whole-house fan mounted to the ceiling of the uppermost level, cools by pulling hot, stale air up into the attic where it exits through vents.

Cut your grass cheaply

By the editors of Consumers Reports

If you have a small or medium-sized lawn, some low-priced power mowers will do a fine job. Usually sold at the corner hardware or local discount store, they're priced at about $250 or less.

These Model T's of the power-mower market don't have an electric starter; you yank a cord to start the engine. They're not self-propelled; you supply the push. And they don't have a fancy housing. But they do cut grass.

Consumer Reports engineers recently tested 42 models — 31 side-dischargers and 11 rear-baggers. Although none were outstanding in every respect, all were reasonably easy to start, and the engines ran flawlessly.

Federal safety standards now require all lawn mowers to be designed so that your fingers and toes avoid contact with the whirling blade. The safety features on the tested mowers do the job. The mowers took no more than two seconds to stop the blade — quick enough to eliminate an accident.

To keep the blade going, you have to hold down a "deadman" control. When you let go — to empty the grass catcher, say, or clear debris — the control shuts off the engine. To begin mowing again, you have to hold the deadman control and, while behind the mower, restart the engine with a yank on the pull cord.

A side-discharger gives you the choice of bagging the grass clippings or dispersing them over the lawn. With the bag in place, however, a side-discharge mower can be awkward to maneuver in confined areas and around obstacles. If your lawn is mostly wide-open spaces or if you don't intend to bag the clippings, a side-discharger would be for you.

Four side-discharge mowers were especially recommended. The top-rated Homelite/-Jacobsen SD20 left grass as smooth as a carpet. It excelled in bagging and cutting tall grass, and its cutting height was easy to adjust. But, it did not disperse clippings well and, at $250, was the costliest side-model tested.

The Murray 20221 and Aircap 4020 were rated Best Buys at $120. Both bagged well, but were only fair at dispersing clippings — and unbolting all four wheels to change the cutting height was a nuisance. At $170, the Lawn Chief 51 performed well and had no serious faults.

If you have confined areas in your yard and are really serious about bagging the grass clippings as well as all the twigs, leaves and other debris that the vacuuming action of a power mower picks up, a rear-bagging model would be the better choice for you. But since its chute is aimed at the operator, it shouldn't be used without a bag or optional deflector.

Among the 11 rear-baggers tested, any of eight models would be effective. All were priced from $190 to $240, and all were excellent baggers — an important factor.

The engineers top-rated the Murray 21851 priced at $190, followed by two Sears models, catalog numbers 3831 ($240) and 3830 ($190). The next four models were rated equal — the Atlas 202141 at $195, Lawn Chief 81 at $220, Wheeler Gran Prix WRB21 at $200, and Yardmaster WRB21 at $200. Also recommended was the Aircap Mastercut 9321 priced at $199.

A rear bagger that doesn't fill its bag almost to capacity is especially annoying. The engineers downrated the Roper Rally B110, the Dynamark 213504, and the Garden Pride 42216 because of their inferior bagging ability. (C)1986, Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

Training in special needs at Aquinas

NEWTON — Aquinas Junior College at Newton is offering Introduction to the Special Needs Child, Sept. 15 through Oct. 23, Monday and Thursday evenings from 6 to 9:10 p.m.

Introduction to the Special Needs Child explores disabilities in children, both psychological and physical, with an emphasis on the components that made the well-adjusted child.

This is one of four courses needed to complete the Early Childhood Certificate Program. All four courses, in the program, meet the requirements for licensing by the Massachusetts Office for Children.

An array of other evening courses are being offered by Aquinas/Newton, also commencing Sept. 15.

For more information on any evening courses call Aquinas Junior College at Newton at 969-4400 ext. 7 or ext. 21.

Power tools going cordless

By Better Homes and Gardens
A Meredith Magazine

Anyone who's ever tried to untangle a 50-foot extension cord, looked high and low for a three-prong plug adapter, or come up a foot or two short when running a power line to do a job can imagine the potential of cordless power tools.

But just how well do these new tools work? Here's a report from the June issue of Better Homes and Gardens:

Cordless tools won't replace their tethered cousins, but they're so handy that once you've tried them you'll wonder how you ever got along without them. Irritating little jobs that keep you moving — putting up curtain rods, for example — become almost fun. Also, work in awkward places, such as repairing a rotted section of fascia, becomes much simpler without cords.

Cordless power tools have impressive stamina. In a simple, one-time test of each tool, we found the following. (A) The Hitachi 6½-inch circular saw ($200) crosscut 67 pieces of 2x4-inch lumber before slowing. (B) Black and Decker's jigsaw (148) eased through the turns on about 20 linear feet of ½-inch plywood. (C) The Sears cordless electric screwdriver ($40) doggedly inserted and removed fifty 2¼-inch self-tapping wood screws. (D) Porter-Cable's hammer drill ($195) drilled 120 holes in light-gauge metal and concrete. (E) The Skil power drill ($125 with case and extra battery) did better at drilling holes of ¼ inch or less, but steadily took on ½-inch holes as well.

The battery packs on these tools typically remove for recharge in an hour, but recharging time varies from one to three hours. Recharging procedures vary, too. Some tools aren't supposed to be charged for more than their alloted time. Others are more conveniently designed — they can be left plugged in after the main charge is complete.

But remember, charges won't last indefinitely. Some units lose 1 percent of charge for every day they're left idle. If left unused for 90 days, some units will only recharge of 80 percent capacity on the first charge, but regain full capacity on subsequent charges.

One surprising feature of these tools is how quietly they run. You'll find them a pleasure to use.

Don't be fooled into thinking cordless tools are toys, however. With safety in mind, manufacturers include on-off switches in addition to the normal triggers.

Still, especially if young children are around, remember to remove the battery pack when you leave a job — just as you'd unplug the extension cord on any other power tool.

'Meditration' a new way to settle disputes

Divestment official

Robert Dickinson runs Agreement Inc. to solve disputes without going to court.

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The light dawned for labor lawyer Robert Dickinson when he helped settle a nickel-an-hour dispute between management and a union a couple of years ago.

The dispute lasted for 18 weeks and had cost both sides around $50,000 in negotiation fees. The hourly increase the union was seeking would net its workers only between $2,000 and $3,000.

There had to be a better way, Dickinson, who represented management, realized.

Shortly thereafter, he divised his own method for settling controversies and formed a company — Agreement Inc. — to implement it. Newton's car dealers hired him in 1985 to represent their interests and resolve differences with residents and the city.

He calls his method "meditration" — a concept for resolving disputes without going to court or formal arbitation. "I've found I could settle more disputes in a better way at the Pillar House (restaurant) than the courthouse," he says.

Meditration is based on Dickinson's belief that most disputes linger because neither side reveals what it really wants.

"The wind isn't a good wind unless you know the direction you're going," he says. "In many of these disputes, all you're seeing is the lighthouse, not the rocks and shoals underneath."

Dickinson was unable to settle that nickel-an-hour labor dispute until he discovered the real issue was how the shop foremen were to be appointed. "We met at the Union Oyster House over a sandwich and reached an agreement," says the former Newton resident, now living in Needham.

Once the goals are clear, it is Dickinson's job to identify the roadblocks. He then encourages both sides to hurdle the smallest one and go from there.

"Nothing succeeds like success," he says of clearing that first roadblock. "Then they can say, 'Maybe we can make the next one.'"

Dickinson admits Newton's car dealers — six on Washington Street and one on Beacon Street — and residents have not always been at peace. Each side has goals to achieve and barriers to clear.

For the dealers, he says, "What we want in exchange for being better corporate citizens is some consideration for the things we need," Dickinson said.

The dealers need more parking for customers and employees, especially on Washington Street. They also require space to store unsold cars, as the recent discovery that Newton-Nissan was keeping vehicles on a Webster Street lot shows. The company was apparently unaware it needed a special permit to do so.

To help the dealers, Newton could allow motor vehicle storage in manufacturing zones as a "matter of right," Dickinson says.

Instead, the Zoning Review Committee (ZRC) has proposed local car merchants be required to secure special permits for such things as additional parking or building changes, Dickinson says. The ZRC recommendations have to be approved by the Board of Aldermen.

Special permits "restrict your ability to make any changes or improvements," Dickinson says. "You're like in a strait jacket."

Residents and the city have a stake in assisting the dealers and would receive a return for the concessions they seek, says Dickinson.

Successful auto dealerships offer residents quality repair service and the city tax revenues. The dealers pay almost $200,000 a year in property taxes, he says.

More importantly, Newton residents own about 70,000 cars, which generate a hefty sum in excise taxes for the city, he says.

Dealerships also offer low-density businesses to a community which was shocked when Connery Associates demonstrated that over 12.5 million square foot of development could be built in the city's village centers.

Auto stores could be replaced by three-story office or apartment buildings that generate more traffic and are significantly larger, he says.

"If they were forced to leave, I think you could guarantee a higher density, which could put more demand on city schools, police and fire," says Dickinson.

Up to now, the dealers have not gained the sympathy of city officials. At least three — Clay Chevrolet, Frost Motors and Honda Village — have acquired property adjacent to their places of business for inventory storage, Dickinson says. But aldermen have turned down their applications for special permits to store cars on that land, he says.

But Dickinson, confident that meditration will work, hopes he can bring the dealers, city officials and residents together. "One of the things we hope to accomplish is to try to build an understanding," he says.

Teen and officials look on as Governor signs bill

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — When Newton North High School senior Steven Calechman got a call from the governor's office recently, he knew his four-month effort to change the course of local government had succeeded.

He was invited to a ceremony at which Gov. Michael S. Dukakis would sign legislation officially breaking the economic ties between Newton and American companies doing business in South Africa.

Last week, Dukakis signed the bill and presented it to Calechman. State Senator Jack Backman, D-Newton, had requested the governor invite the teenager.

"That's a signed copy of your first bill," the governor said. "May there be many more."

The reserved young man could only smile shyly in the presence of the state's chief executive. "I'm honored to be here," Calechman had said just before the ceremony. "I didn't expect to be here. It was the governor's office that called me."

Alderman Matthew Jefferson, who sponsored Newton's divestment petition, gave much of the credit for its passage to Calechman and other Newton North students.

It was Calechman who brought the issue of apartheid — South Africa's system of racial oppression — to the attention of Newton North students with an article in the school's newspaper last October.

It was Calechman and fellow senior Tracy Welch who organized Apartheid Education week at North in February.

And a month later it was Calechman and a handful of the school's students and teachers who demanded the Retirement Board rid the city of its $3.5 million in South African-related holdings.

The board refused, members saying they first wanted the city's 3,000 present and past employees to take an advisory vote. But by then the local movement had gained too much momentum.

Jefferson, an outspoken proponent of divestment, simply took the issue to the Board of Alderman. The board passed the local legislation with silent unanimity in June.

Backman and state Rep. David Cohen, D-Newton, then whisked the bill through the Legislature and onto the governor's desk.

"That was the impetus," said Jefferson of Calechman and his fellow North students. "The Board of Aldermen is tremendously responsive. They're responsive to the citizens and especially the students."

Backman said Newton's divestment bill moved more quickly through the Legislature than any legislation he has sponsored in the last 10 years.

That swift passage probably results from the growing opposition to apartheid among community and campus groups, he said. But the effort will come to naught if the federal government does not follow their lead.

"It is now necessary for President Reagan to take action to let the world know the United States is against the policy of the government of South Africa," he said.

Apartheid is especially reprehensible, Backman added, since South Africa's white minority uses it to deny political and economic equality to the majority — blacks, Asians and mixed-race Coloreds.

Cohen, who was not present at the ceremony, said Newton's bill will once again focus people's attention on "one of the world's greatest injustices."

Standing outside the door to the governor's office, Calechman pondered the Dukakis signature which by the end of next year will cause the city to rearrange its investment portfolio.

The teenager, who graduated from Newton North in June and will attend the University of Wisconsin, did not know what to say when asked if he would have the bill framed.

O'Hara's features pride of the Irish

By Andrew P. McCloy
Correspondent

NEWTON — Bass Ale and Guiness Stout flow freely from the taps of this oaken bar in the Highlands. Kelly Green is the color of the awnings and barstools, and the owner's name is O'Hara.

Despite the Gaelic motif, the sign in the window states "Help Wanted, No Irish Need Apply."

Irishmen have no fear. John O'Hara, proprietor of O'Hara's Restaurant and Pub on Walnut Street will gladly hire you. The sign is just a wee bit o' Irish humor.

But back in the early 1820s, when Irish immigrants flocked to America, the sign could be seen in most storefronts throughout Boston. Back then, NINA was nothing to laugh about.

The old Yankee Brahmins, who arrived in America a century before expressed great animosity toward the Irish immigrants, referring to them as lazy drunkards.

But time has shattered old stereotypes. Boston today has an Irish mayor and is the birthplace of the only Irish-Catholic president, John F. Kennedy.

Purchased by O'Hara's wife, Barbara, at an antique store in Wells, Me., the sign is one of many Irish artifacts to be found throughout the restaurant.

Like any pub in old Eire, O'Hara's is a place for people to quaff ale, tell tales and find a home away from home.

"This is an excellent crowd," boasts Richard Steffens, a 27-year-old cook at an Italian restaurant around the corner. "It's like a big family in here, everyone knows each other."

"Every morning when I see the sign, I have to take a five minute break because it moves me so," Larry Saklad, who calls himself O'Saklad during his shift as a cook at O'Hara's, says.

"Faith and begorrah," he says. "Ireland is just a wee bit o' heaven that fell into the ocean. Ah, the luck o' the Irish."

Unlike most Irish pubs though, O'Hara's does not have a strolling fiddler or guitar player strumming tunes from the Old Country. Instead of the Clancy Brothers or the Irish Rovers, easy listening music filters through the restaurant through speakers hanging on the wall.

However, this all changes March 17 when O'Hara hires an accordian player who squeezes out the festive tunes heard in the pubs of Dublin.

"We pack the place on St. Paddy's Day," O'Hara says proudly.

He adds that no disgruntled Irishman has ever complained about the sign. "It's just a joke and people love it," he says.

Bob Daly looks at the "Help Wanted" sign at O'Hara's.

Police briefs

Items reported stolen from auto

NEWTON CENTRE — Two pairs of prescription glasses, valued at $250, and $60 worth of cassette tapes were stolen from a 1986 BMW parked in a Winston Road driveway Sunday night, police said. A 1986 Mercedes Benz was also reportedly entered, but nothing was stolen.

Cruisers vandalized while garage

WEST NEWTON — Two police parking control cruisers were vandalized while parked on the second level of a garage at the intersection of Chestnut and Washington streets sometime over the weekend, police said. Vandals spray-painted the hood, windshields and fenders of the cars with red paint.

Pedestrian victim of alleged assault

WEST NEWTON — A Framingham man who was crossing the street at Chestnut and Washington streets was allegedly assaulted Monday afternoon by pickup-truck driver who was angry the pedestrian was in his way, police said. The pedestrian told police he was crossing with the light when the pickup truck was edging up over the crosswalk intimidating him. The driver of the pickup yelled at the pedestrian who continued walking away from the scene, police said. The driver then allegedly kicked the pedestrian in the back and threw a soda can that hit the pedestrian's head, according to reports.

The Framingham man ran to his office on Washington Street when the driver allegedly chased him up the front staris of the building with the truck. Police said the truck is listed to a West Newton resident and the incident is being investigated.

Police report no suspects in thefts

CHESTNUT HILL — Approximately $60 in cash was stolen from employees' purses in the backroom of Designer's Clothing on Route 9 Monday afternoon, police said. The store managers told police someone entered the backroom and went through all the employees' belongings. There are no suspects, police said.

Lawnmower reported stolen

WEST NEWTON — A lawnmower was stolen from a garage of an Albermarle Road home Sunday night, police said. Entrance reportedly was gained by prying off the lock and latch on the garage door.

Intruder discovered in kitchen

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — A Chester Street resident discovered an intruder in his kitchen when he went for a snack during a commercial break, police said. The family was sitting in their living room watching television and when the son went to the kitchen he discovered a black male in his 30's hovering over some perscription drugs on a window sill above the kitchen sink, police said. The intruder reportedly saw the resident entering the kitchen and ran for the back door. The homeowner picked up a chair and threw it at the intruder but missed, according to police. Responding officers unsuccessfully searched the area on foot.

Pair released in moped larceny case

NEWTON — Daniel Mangouranes and Robert G. Acerra, both 28 and from Roslindale, pleaded not guilty in district court yesterday to a charge of larceny of a motor vehicle. They were released on personal recognizance and their cases were continued to Aug. 19. The pair was arrested Tuesday evening when an officer, talking to a clerk at the White-Hen Pantry on Langley Road, saw the men carrying a moped down the street, police said. The officer reportedly chased the suspects, who dropped the moped on the street. They were apprehended at the intersection of Langley Road and Beacon Street. The Tomas moped, valued at $650 reportedly belongs to a Hamlin Road resident.

Radar detector reported stolen

AUBURNDALE — An Escort radar detector worth $300 was stolen from a 1983 Mazda parked at the Marriott Hotel Tuesday evening, police said. Entrance was gained by smashing the passenger door window.

Walkman reported stolen from car

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — An AM-FM Sony Walkman, worth $275, was stolen from a 1979 Mazda while it was parked on Erie Avenue Monday night, police said.

Thefts reported in Nonantum

NONANTUM — A 1982 Ford Bronco was stolen from a construction site on Adams Avenue Tuesday, police said. In a separate incident, assorted plumbing tools, worth over $900, and an AM-FM portable cassette deck were stolen from a 1976 Dodge Van parked on Capital Street Tuesday, according to police.

Police probe alleged kidnapping

NEWTON — Police are investigating an alleged kidnapping reported by an Oakvale Road resident at about 3 p.m., Saturday. According to police, the man said his girlfriend's parents kidnapped her and are attempting to convert her from Roman Catholicism back to Judaism. However, Portland police said they are classifying it as a missing person report. Portland police Lt. Douglas Cole said, "We're attempting to locate the person, we're not even sure the parents are restraining her." Cole classified the boyfriend's account as "not very credible" because he could not provide them with much information. "We've advised the Newton Police Dept. to contact the parents and try to get their side of the story," said Cole.

Arrested for disturbance at hospital

NEWTON — A Newton man was arrested and charged with trespassing after causing a disturbance at Newton Wellesly Hospital at about 10:45 Saturday. Police were called to the hospital to remove a patient who was strapped into a stretcher when they arrived. The 18-year-old was refused treatment by doctors because he was "too unruly" police said. The man had been swearing and threatening the staff. At one point, according to reports, he pushed security guards away. Police escorted him off the grounds and warned him not to return. Fifteen minutes later officers were called back and found the man creating a disturbance. Police then arrested him.

Hospitalized for drug overdose

NEWTON — A 31-year-old man was brought to Newton Wellesly Hospital for a drug overdose after police arrested and charged him with disorderly conduct at 11 p.m. Saturday night. The incident took place at 1321 Washington St.

Van reported stolen from Marriott

AUBURNDALE — A 1986 GMAC van, belonging to a New York resident, was stolen from the Marriott Hotel parking lot on Commonwealth Avenue Sunday evening, police said.

Car allegedly stolen from mall lot

CHESTNUT HILL — A Newton resident's 1986 Chevrolet Monte Carlo was stolen while it was parked in the Chestnut Hill Mall parking lot Saturday afternoon, police said.

Seeks seat on county charter board

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

The chairman of Newton's Finance Committee will become that city's representative on the Middlesex County Charter Commission if voters approve creation of the group this November.

Alderman Paul E. Coletti, 36, of 34 Columbia Ave., was the sole resident to turn in nomination papers for the city's seat on the commission by Tuesday's deadline.

Meanwhile, two Waltham men will vie for the commission seat that represents Waltham and Watertown. Paul Blazar, 35, of 43 Marlborough Road, and Carmelo S. Panzera, 56, of 6 Park Place, both easily beat the qualifying deadline.

Weston officials said no town residents turned in papers for the commission seat that includes Weston, Lincoln, Wayland, Concord, Sudbury and Natick.

The charter commission will be created if Middlesex County voters endorse a Nov. 4 ballot question and simultaneously elect 15 district representatives. The three county commissioners and Newton Mayor Theodore D. Mann, as chairman of the Middlesex County Advisory Board, will round out the group's membership.

The commission is scheduled to meet for 18 months and issue suggested revisions in the county's form of government by June 1, 1988. Among the possible recommendations are a complete abolition of the county or a state takeover of the county corrections system.

Coletti became Newton's only candidate when two other residents failed to qualify.

Attorney and former alderman Thomas Concannon did not turn in valid nomination papers by the deadline and Joseph L. Bradley, 34, who owns a Waltham antique store, withdrew from the race by not submitting the required 150 voter signatures.

"I did have an interest in the charter commission, but I already have a full-time commitment managing Tony Mandile's campaign for state representative." Bradley said. "I'm so busy I couldn't have dedicated enough time to it."

Coletti, a 10-year veteran of Newton's Board of Aldermen, was surprised by his uncontested status.

"I was gearing up for a major campaign," he said yesterday. "It will certainly make an easier summer for me. It's probably the best news I've had so far this vacation."

Mayor Mann, a longtime advocate for abolition of county government, encouraged Coletti's bid for the Newton seat. Three years ago, he chose Coletti to act as his "proxy" representative on the county advisory board.

Coletti has already pledged to push for a state takeover of county courthouses and jail because the state owes the county $30 million in overdue rent. If the state rejects that idea, he has said he is prepared to advocate abolition of the county altogether.

Blazar and Panzera will fight it out for the district seat that includes Waltham and Watertown.

Blazar, who grew up in Newton and moved to Waltham in 1984, recently returned to his post as Middlesex County administrator when a permanent director of the Middlesex County Hospital in Waltham was hired earlier this month.

As an employee of the county for 10 years, Blazar has said his experience will be of value to the charter commission.

He has said the commission "will determine the course county government will take in this state for the foreseeable future." Blazar also believes the county can provide many services more efficiently than the state.

Panzera, who was born in Waltham and raised in Newton, ran at-large last year for a spot on the Waltham City Council, but did not survive the September primary.

He is a U.S. Air Force veteran of the Korean and Vietnam wars and is now employed as a sheet metal mechanic at MacNabb Engineering Co. Inc., on Lexington Street in Waltham.

While living in Northborough, Panzera served on several town committees, including a stint on the town charter commission and four years as a member of the Northborough Board of Selectmen.

He moved back to Waltham in 1980.

The next deadline facing charter commission candidates is Aug. 26, when they must file financial disclosure statements with the state Ethics Commission and turn in certified nomination papers to state election officials.

Sentenced in stabbing

By David Weber
Staff Writer

CAMBRIDGE — A Newton man was sentenced last Wednesday to 4½ to seven years in MCI-Cedar Junction in Walpole for stabbing a man in a Waltham bar on Thanksgiving.

Judge Hiller Zobel pronounced the sentence on David Katz, 30, three weeks after Katz pleaded guilty to stabbing John Dwyer, of Waltham, twice while the two men were in the Reef Bar last November.

Bella said Katz must serve at least three years of the sentence before he is eligible for parole.

District Attorney Peter Bella said Katz had walked over to a table where Dwyer and a woman were sitting and "mumbled something," then used a buck knife to stab Dwyer in the abdomen and in the groin.

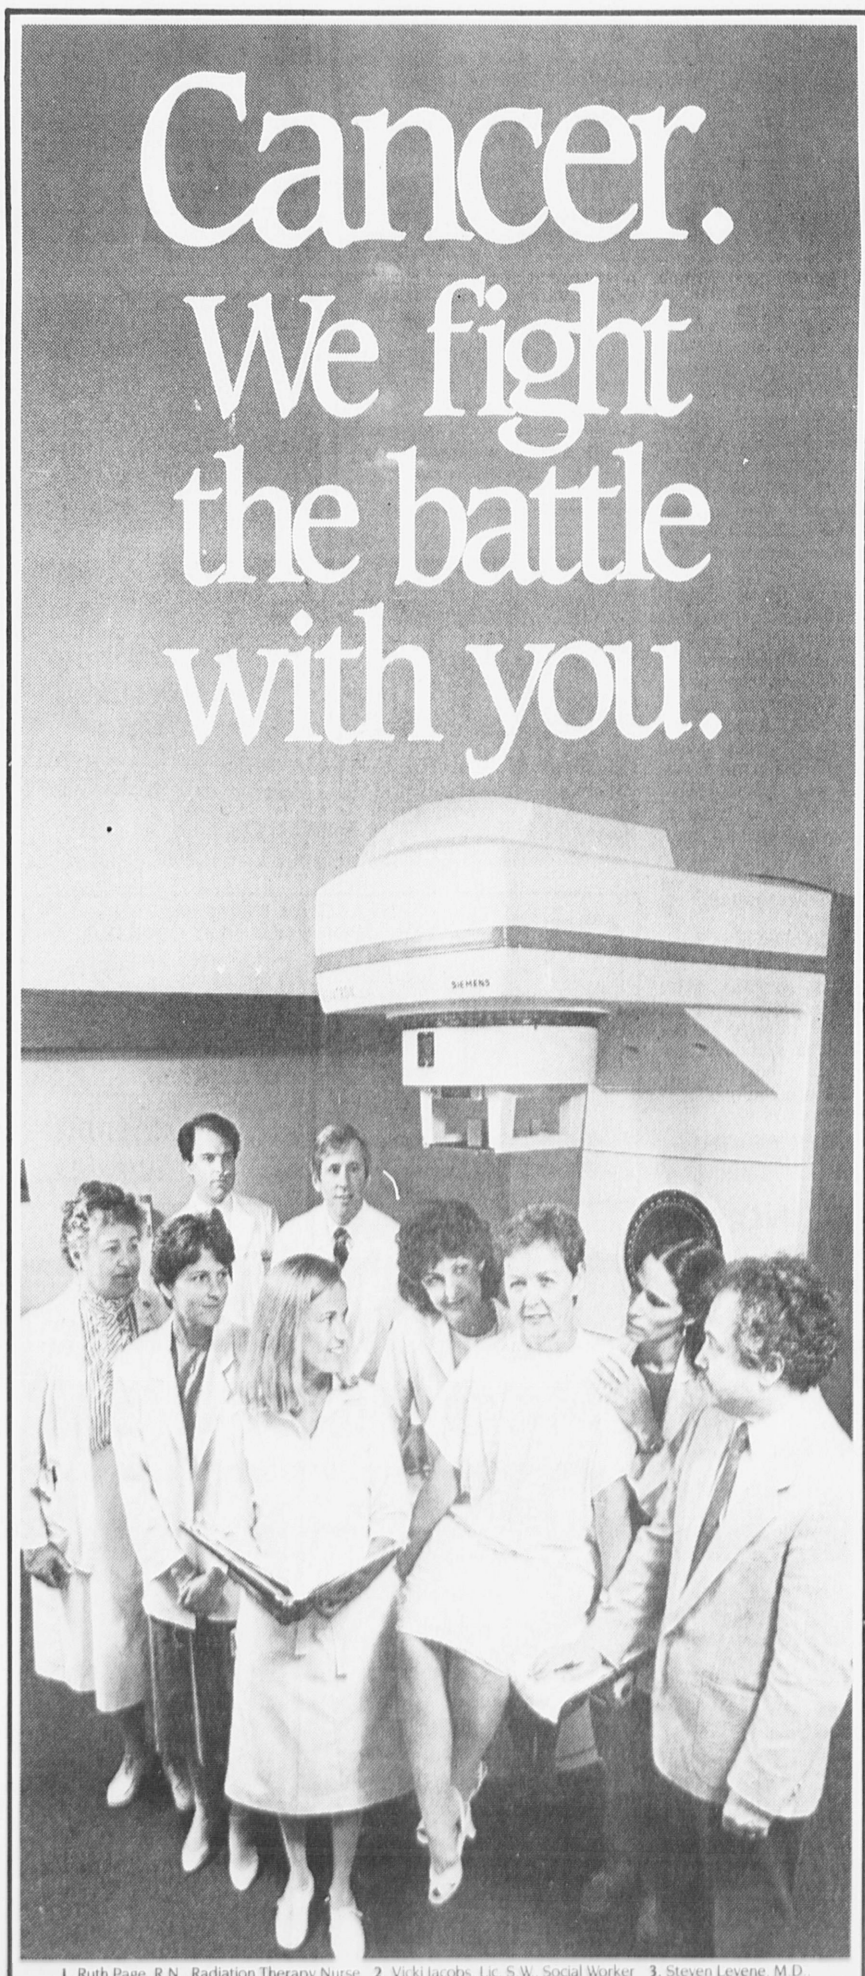

Free passes

NEWTON — The Newton Free Library has two passes for the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and the DeCordova Museum in Lincoln and one pass for the Mass. Audubon Society.

These passes may be borrowed by Newton residents without charge.

The passes, loaned on a first-come first-served basis, may be borrowed for three days. An individual or a family may borrow only one pass at a time.

'Sexy senior' makes mark as model

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — It has been a long time since hecklers pelted Edgar Swail with rotten tomatoes at the old Crawford Theatre in Scollay Square.

While the theater, the square, and probably most of the patrons are no longer with us, Edgar Swail is enjoying the personal equivalen of a Broadway revival.

Back in the early 1920s, Swail used to leave his Newton Highlands home and take the train into Boston, where he would sing and dance during amateur nights held at the long-defunct tavern.

Ever since he could remember, the 79-year-old Swail wanted to be a star. He tried his best, but the drunks at the Crawford did not appreciate his talent.

Sixty years later, Edgar Swail, sitting on the porch of the same house he was born in, is having the last laugh.

Earlier this week, Swail was posing in Dedham for Spotwise, a television production house shooting an ad for the Donahue show. A distinguished gent with a mop of white hair and shining blue eyes, Swail says producers now see him as a "sexy senior.

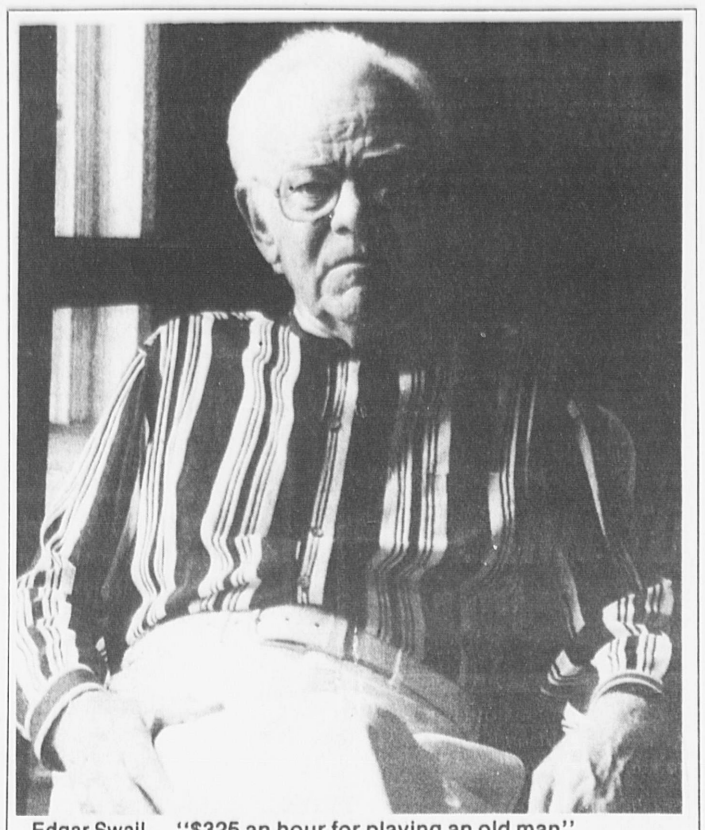

"When I was younger, I used to be the leading man," he says. "I was doing a lot of community theater here in Newton and in Boston. That was for nothing. Now, I am getting paid as much as $325 per hour, and it is for playing an old man. I wish I was still playing lovers."

Swail's job is testimony to the adage about good things coming to those who wait.

Despite the less-than rave reviews at the Crawford, Swail did appear in an Anne Nichols play at the old Kieth-Albee Theater, now the Opera House.

A professional career, however, did not pan out. To prove that, he pulls out an old rejection letter from Hal Roach Studios, a big operation in the 20s and 30s.

Still, it was a time, Swail recalls, when acting was the most important thing in his life. The dream, though, did not last long.

Instead of going to New York "to starve with the other actors," Swail stayed in Newton and went to work for the R.H. Stearn Co.

"My father died at an early age," he says. "It was just me and my mom living in this house and then I met Permiliam, my wife, and with all that, I realized that I had financial obligations. I had to earn money and acting took a back seat."

While working his way up the corporate ladder, Swail continued to act on the side. Every year, he participated in the company play, which was quite well-known in Boston at the time.

In addition, he performed in community theaters in the area. But, he had a home and a wife to tend to and worked hard to build the career that brought in the money.

In 1951, Swail switched jobs and went to work for Cooley's China and Glass. After 26 years as a buyer of fine china and glass, a long-time acquaintance and a little bit of luck led finally to Swail's shot at stardom.

"Cooley's had an office on Newbury Street," he says. "I used to see Jo Summers, who runs Copley 7, a modeling agency, on the street. I used to see her and say hello.

"One day," he continues, "I had a chance meeting with her on the street and we began talking. I told her about my pending retirement and she asked me to come by her studio."

Summers liked what she saw and for the last 10 years, Swail's face has been seen in magazines, newspapers and department stores across the country.

From Santa to Scrooge, from a grouchy geriatric to a kindly grandpa, Edgar Swail has played character parts that are just now giving him the recognition he so badly wanted as a terrified teen on stage at the Crawford.

Instead of being a target for putrified vegetables, Swail's mug is in a book the agency sends out to advertising executives and television producers. More and more, he says producers are looking for swinging seniors to put in their ads.

"There is a better market for seniors than there used to be," he says. "If you look at population statistics, you see that we seniors are becoming a larger and larger share of the population. Producers want to reach that market."

Even so, Swail does not work every day. In fact, he says he is fortunate if he is called in twice a month. That does not stop his enthusiasm.

"I love working with all the young models," he says with a smile that seems to remember his days as a young and handsome leading man. "They are so talented and so enthusiastic."

In 10 years, though, he has amassed quite a thick little portfolio. In it are ads from Dunkin Donuts, Zayre's, Boston Gas and Poloroid, among others. His favorite, he says, is a Zayre's store ad.

Six feet long and four feet wide, the ad — he as a kindly grandpa with a little girl on his lap — hung in Zayre's from Maine to Florida. One day, he remembers a call from a nephew in Pensacola, Fla.

"I got a call saying, 'Unc, I was in the store today and saw a poster of you.' That really made me happy."

Unlike Frank Sinatra, Swail readily admits he has some regrets.

Playground attendance down - programs close

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

NEWTON — Last year there were 10 supervised playgrounds sponsored by the Newton Parks and Recreation Department. This year there are but five.

"The number of playgrounds was reduced because of the times," says Fran Towle, deputy commissioner. "Now, many families have two parents working, and they want a more structured program for their kids."

"The kids don't come any more," says Jim Coffey, one of four counselors at the Auburndale Playground. "We get maybe six to eight a day, but never enough to really do something. If we could get 10 to 15 kids at a time, we could make it like a camp."

Often, a lone box made of craft sticks and a pile of colored paper are the only signs that children have participated in the supervised programs.

On a typical day at Auburndale Park, children are outside laughing as they climb jungle gyms, use the slides and swings, or feed the ducks. Most of the younger children are with a parent; the older ones are self-sufficient. No one seems to need

Samuel Stuart, 7, who rode their bikes to Auburndale Park. "We like the baseball field and sandpile. We used to do arts and crafts, but not any more."

"I wanted the job because I like working with kids," says Coffey, putting aside his book. "But most of them go to private camps. It's not that they don't know about the program, it's just that they don't come any more."

While cutting back the number of supervised playgrounds, the Newton Parks and Recreation Department has expanded its summer camp program, which provides the structure many parents want.

According to Pat Savage, program manager, each camp has room for about 120 participants. There are seven one-week sessions.

The five supervised playgrounds, open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday until August 15, are: Auburndale Park on West Pine Street, which includes a large picnic area; Burr Park on Waverly Avenue in Newton Corner

Jaycees strong to the core

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

NEWTON — In neighboring Waltham, the local Jaycees chapter is suffering through a serious numbers crisis. But membership in Newton's chapter is remaining constant.

"There are too many good young people for our membership to decline," says former chapter president Raymond Ewer. However, it was not always this way for the Newton group.

Just 15 years ago, the Newton Jaycees had only two active members, according to then-president Orvil "Buster" Hagaman. Now, he says, the group has about 60 members and a strong core group of 25.

In 1970, when Hagaman took office as chapter president, he and fellow member Jim Bishop "were" the Jaycees. Because the age limit for regular Jaycees members is 35, most of the older Jaycees who had been "backing up the organization" retired, and the younger members "didn't have the knowledge to push forward," says Hagaman.

Facing the possibility that their charter would be revoked, Hagaman and Bishop started a membership drive.

"We found the voter registration lists and sent letters to many people," Hagaman recalls. "Three of them showed up to our meeting and only one of those joined. We decided that it was not a good way to get members!"

What did work for the Newton chapter was word of mouth. Hagaman estimates that over the years he has brought "at least 15 to 20" friends into the Jaycees. "I just tell my friends to go to the meetings, and 90 percent of them think it's fantastic," he says.

"The Waltham group could hold parties to bring in members, but the best way to get people who want to work is word of mouth. Everybody has to know somebody, and if five people bring five friends, and they bring five friends, it will snowball," explains Hagaman.

The Newton Jaycees were lucky; just a few years after the membership crisis, the Massachusetts chapter insisted that women be allowed in the organization. The women "did a fantastic job," according to Hagaman, and boosted membership as well.

Virginia Day Hayden of 8 Eden Ave. in West Newton was named to the board of overseers at Bates College in Maine.

She is one of two representatives recently elected from the college's Alumni Association. Hayden's activities have included serving on the college's alumni executive committee, as a class agent, and on the alumni fund committee. She has also assumed many church-related leadership positions, including president of Church Women United in Newton.

the Hebrew Rehabilitation Center for Aged's $11.3 million program for the '80s Campaign. Given by William and Celia Weiner of Brookline, the generous donation recognized the fact that the Center's Women's Auxiliary is dedicating its annual Program Book to Knopping this year, because of her work on the group's behalf.

Judy Quinn of Auburndale is one of 25 photographers whose work was exhibited by "Photographers at Large" at the Concord Art association on July 25. The exhibition will continue through August 22.

Kentaro Tsutsumi of Newton has been named professor emeritus of civil engineering at Tufts University.

Michael Babcock

Tsumi, a national expert in the field of missile launching and guidance, designed the machinery that helps give stability to rocket launching pads and allows testing of high precision instruments. Tsutsumi, a native of Honolulu, has been with Tufts since 1963.

John J. Sturniolo, of 37 Smith Avenue in Newton, has been appointed Assistant Sargeant at Arms for the Disabled Veterans Department of Massachusetts.

Laura L. White of West Newton has been elected customer service manager by the BayBank Middlesex Board of Directors. Currently, she is enrolled in the bank's Community Banking Management Development Program. Upon completion of the program, she will be assigned management responsibility.

Michael J. Babcock of Chestnut Hill has accepted a leading role in United Way of Massachusetts Bay's 1986 fundraising campaign.

Babcock, chairman and chief executive officer of Filene's, will serve on the 1986 United Way Campaign Cabinet as Events Sponsorship chairman.

Babcock is a director of the United Way and of Liberty Mutual Insurance Companies, vice president of the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce and of the Retailers Association of America, a member of the Massachusetts Business Roundtable, a member of the board of trustees at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute and on the board of overseers at the New England Medical Center.

The Rev. Dale Davis Jr. has been named director of church and alumni relations for Andover Newton Theological School in Newton Center.

A United Church of Christ minister who has been pastor of the Brick United Church of Christ in Whitsett, N.C. since 1984, Davis will coordinate promotion and fund raising with alumni and American Baptist and United Church of Christ congregations and denominational offices related to the school.

Michael R. Franco, former director of public affairs of the National Technical Institute of the Deaf at Rochester Institute of Technology (RIT) and a Boston College graduate, has returned to his alma mater as director of communications.

Franco's responsibilities include public and media relations, university publications, and internal/external dissemination of information.

A native of Fall River, Franco lives with his wife and daughter in Holliston.

John Solon of Newton Centre has been named a manager in the Tax Department of Laventhol & Horwath. Karen Nell Smith of Waban has been appointed manager in the Management Advisory Services Group for the accounting, financial, and business consulting firm.

Deana Bomhof of Newton was presented with the "Certificate of Creative Excellence" at the International Awards Competition of the United States Industrial Film Festival Association recently. She received the award for a 30-minute videotape, "A Joyous Labor," which presents the different options available to women in childbirth.

The tape was nominated tor an ACE award, which is equivalent to being nominated for an Emmy.

Bomhof, technical director at Continental Cablevision in Wellesley, worked with former Newton resident Dr. Joseph Stone to produce the tape.

Martin O'Malley, Newton resident and accountant for the city of Waltham, has been elected director of member relations for the 128 chapter of National Association of Accountatnts. He's been a member for two years. Presently, O'Malley is attending Bentley College.

John Solon of Newton Centre has been named manager in the Tax Department for the Boston office of Laventhol & Horwath.

Law won't ease city's shortage of housing

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The aldermanic Zoning Amendment Committee (ZAC) has hammered out an accessory apartment ordinance proposal that will make it possible for over 2,200 homes to have a legal second dwelling.

But it will not significantly relieve the city's housing shortage, according to Glenn Morris, a member of the Zoning Review Committee (ZRC).

"They passed a regulation that satisfies the need to preserve the historically significant older buildings," said Morris after the ZAC completed its work last week.

Most of the 2,285 Garden City homes that would qualify if the Board of Aldermen adopts the ZAC recommendations already have an accessory apartment in place, he said. "I bet it wouldn't give you more than 100 (apartments), 200 at most," he said.

The ZRC, a committee of residents and aldermen, has studied and proposed revisions of the city's existing zoning ordinances. It is the ZAC's task to review their work and make final recommendations to the full board.

On July 1, ZAC members decided to recommend that a building must be owner-occupied to qualify for an accessory apartment. The owner, they added, must live in the principal dwelling.

Last week, they accepted several ZRC accessory apartment recommendations, but made two changes which would double the number of Garden City homes that could qualify as legal accessory apartments.

The ZRC had recommended that a building would have to have 3,600 square feet of floor space and be built prior to 1923 to qualify. Under these conditions, the Planning Department has figured around 1,000 Garden City homes could add a unit.

The ZAC changed the size requirement to 3,100 square feet and the cutoff date to 1946.

The new date was chosen because most of the city's existing housing stock — 73 percent — was built by that time, Chairman Rodney Barker said. "You'd be dealing with the great majority of single-family homes," he said.

Morris pointed out to the committee that the smallest possible accessory apartment is 700 or 800 square feet, Barker said. Since another ZRC-ZAC proposal is that the apartment cannot be larger than one-third of the building's total size, a house would have to have at least 2,400 square feet to qualify. The committee settled on 3,100 square feet instead because "it didn't want to go that far," Barker said.

The ZAC also voted to recommend that a home with an accessory apartment have at least two off-street parking spaces for the tenants, Barker said.

"You're going to have at least two," he said. "You've got a husband and wife and you're going to have at least two cars."

ZRC member Mary Sivak used statistics to show that Newton should not be compared to the other 15 communities in the greater Boston area that already have accessory apartment legislation.

Of those 15 communities, only one — Cambridge — has more people per square mile than Newton, she said. The rest range from Danver's 2,148 per mile to Weston's 234 per square mile. In contrast, Newton averages 4,723 people per mile.

"It seems illogical to hop, skip and jump through all these towns and find guidelines," she said.

Since Newton is one of the most densely populated municipalities in Massachusetts, it cannot afford an accessory apartment ordinance that would add significant numbers of people, Sivak said.

Former Alderman Lisle Baker said accessory apartments would likely be occupied by adults and would add significant traffic to neighborhoods.

Alderman Carol Robinson said members must consider the city's housing shortage, which exists primarily on the city's north side.

"You come from Chestnut Hill. Your guidelines are different," she said to Baker. "If somebody on my side moves, they've got to have a place to live."

Robinson's views are similar to those of the League of Women Voters, which has argued any building constructed within five years of the ordinance's passage and larger than 2,500 square feet should be eligible for an accessory apartment.

Local man unites armchair quarterbacks

In the last decade, the 29-year-old construction worker has been responsible for starting hundreds of cost-efficient professional football leagues around New England and recruiting some 60 team owners in Newton alone.

As the only commissioner in the history of the Bar Stool Football League (BSFL), he will preside over the annual draft in a large conference room at the Holiday Inn in Auburndale on Sept. 5.

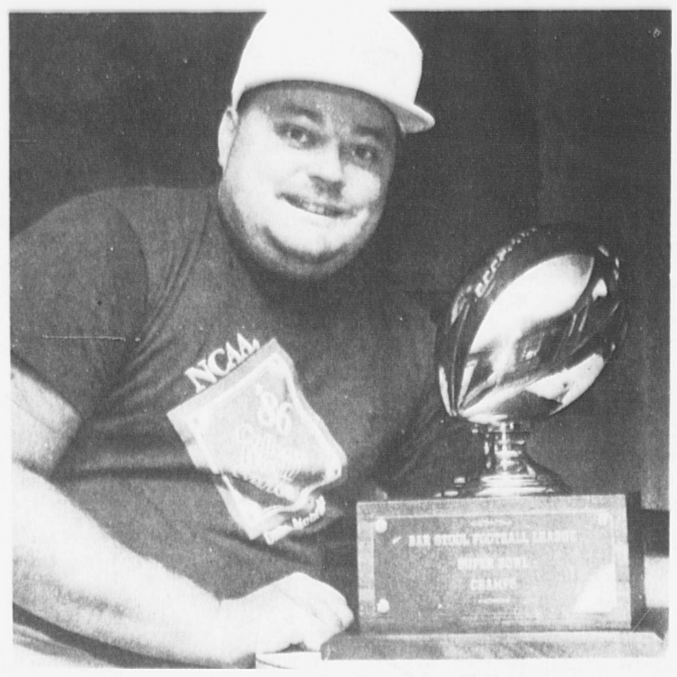

Each of the 14 BSFL owners will select 25 players from the rosters of the National Football League. When the NFL season begins two days later, the success or failure of any BSFL team will depend on the performance of real players.

If, for example, Tony Eason throws three touchdown passes that Sunday, the BSFL owner who has the Patriot quarterback's "rights" gets 18 points. If Irving Fryar is on the receiving end each time and the owner has his rights too, chalk up 18 more.

Ryan, born and raised here, and a few of his buddies thought this whole thing up one Sunday afternoon in 1976 when they were sitting around watching a football game on television.

Not partial to gambling, they began looking for a way to make things more exciting, expand their football knowledge and have fun.

They devised the scoring system, made a few rules and worked out the kinks as the years went by. What started as eight guys looking for something different now ranks as a local phenomenon.

Since placing a small advertisement in Boston newspapers a few months ago, Ryan says he has sold close to 200 kits explaining the entire game, including how to run a draft, choose a starting line-up and trade players.

Orders have come from as nearby as Springfield and as far away as New Hampshire and Vermont.

Several area bars, like the Troubador and Buff's Pub in Waltham, have their own leagues. Whole families are hooked. This season, members of a local police force will get into the act.

"It's worked out well for everyone. I'm kind of amazed," says Ryan, a Dalby Street resident who played three sports for Newton North High School and was named to the All-Suburban League as captain of the basketball team in 1975.

Living and dying with NFL players for 10 years has produced a host of humorous memories for BSFL owners.

There was the first draft, when the eight team owners showed up wearing three-piece suits and clenching cigars in their teeth.

There's the team owner who once picked quarterback Eric Hipple in the first round and has never lived it down.

Another selected Washington Redskin quarterback Joe Theismann and saw his team fold like a leg bone. A team owner with a little more luck once traded five players for Los Angeles Ram running back Eric Dickerson.

Although a player's success on any given Sunday is beyond control, a team owner can use his or her 25-man roster to field a different team of seven skilled players in legal formation each week.

One line-up last year featured such stars as Dallas Cowboy kicker Rafael Septien, Houston Oiler quarterback Warren Moon and New York Jets wide receiver Al Toon.

This year, David Proia, of Myrtle Street, Waltham, will collect the award, complete with his name and those of previous winners inscribed on the side.

There are at least 10 potential owners on a waiting list to join the BSFL and Ryan, who keeps track of league statistics and prints a bi-weekly newsletter, is even looking for a computer to keep track of everything.

Like any sharp commissioner, he is always looking to start new franchises and share the fun. He says he may build on the success of his newspaper advertisement by making his pitch through national sports magazines next year.

Imagine, for only $14.95 and $1 postage, Donald Trump can instantly become commissioner of his own league and all the teams will be stocked with an array of NFL athletes.

He can call it the "Arm Chair Football League" – the ACFL – and not have to pay a penny in salaries or worry about network television contracts.

And he won't take a bath if it folds either.

Animals are your friends.

National League final

Boys' Club rebounds, 2-0, to avoid sweep

NEWTON — For the Newton Boys' Club, there was no place to hide. Coach Steve Smith and his troops were down 2-0 in the best-of-five National League Finals and were about to face Our Lady's top hurler, Frank Battista, who isn't exactly known to give up runs the way Santa Claus hands out gifts.

Still, the home team kept up its spirit and responded with a 2-1 victory over Our Lady's Friday night under the lights at Burke Field. The series was to continue until its completion at the Albemarle ballpark this week.

Battista was on his game. In fact, the hard-throwing righthander tossed a two-hitter and struck out five. But Chuck Proia's four-hitter proved to be a stronger performance on this night, as the Boys' Club stopper allowed only one run, and it came early in the third inning.

Aldo Calcagni led off the frame with an infield hit. Then, Battista flied to left, but Calcagni tagged to second in about the time it took the storm (remember?) to strike earlier in the day.

The heads-up move set the stage for Britt Ryan (2-for-3), who ripped a double to left, scoring Calcagni and making it 1-0 Our Lady's.

Little did the visitors know, Proia would shut the door the rest of the way. Not bad for a pitcher who was making only his second start of the season.

Proia was rewarded offensively when his teammates produced two runs on just one hit in the bottom of the fourth.

After helping his own cause in the third inning by picking off a runner at second, Battista turned a bit self-destructive in the following frame, and the Boys' Club seized the opportunity.

Jim Proia reached on an error and Colin Ryan followed with a single to left to make it first and third with nobody out. A passed ball allowed Proia to score and tie the contest at 1-1.

Ryan went to second and scooted to third when Battista caught the Mark Clear Syndrome. He tossed a wild pitch to put the runner on third with nobody out.

With some clutch pitching, the Our Lady's hurler induced the next hitter to pop out, but George Haggie followed with a sacrifice fly to left for what turned out to be the winning run.

"He's (Battista) their best pitcher," Boys' Club assistant coach Beep Calabro had said after two innings of scoreless ball. "If we beat him, this series may very well go five games."

The Boys' Club had dropped the first two, 10-3 and 4-3, so it needed this one, if just to gain some respect.

Defensively, the home team made three fine plays, two of which overshadowed errors.

In the fourth, the ball was thrown wildly to first, but first baseman Haggie recovered in time to put the tag on the runner, who was caught in a run-down between first and second.

Then, in the fifth, right fielder Steve Fontano made a nice sliding catch to rob Evan Galanis of a basehit.

And after another error in the seventh, the Boys' Club pulled off an unusual double play. With a runner on second, shortstop Jim Proia fielded a grounder and made a strong throw to Haggie, who in turn rifled the ball to third baseman Joe Proia. Proia put the tag on the sliding runner to end the game.

"We beat their best pitcher, and we played better defensively (than the last two games)," Smith said.

Second game

Our Lady's took a 2-0 series lead on Wednesday by defeating the Boys' Club, 4-3, at Lincoln Park.

Britt Ryan and Ron Coppola came up with the big blows in the fifth inning, when Our Lady's scored twice to turn the game around. Ryan's single tied the game and Coppola put his club ahead to stay with a sacrifice fly to center.

The winners got a good relief job from Aldo Calcagni, not normally a pitcher, to nail down the victory. Now they need only one win, and have not yet used ace Frank Battista in the finals.

The Boys' Club, on the other hand, was counting on George Haggie to get them even. Though Haggie didn't pitch a bad game, Our Lady's came up with some clutch hits and now the Club may be running a little thin of pitching.

Though not overpowering, Haggie battled the entire way and had his team ahead going into the bottom of the fifth, 3-2. But he hit Calcagni with the first pitch of the frame, lighting the fuse which eventually burned him.

Battista followed with a sharp single to left and when Mitch Nash bobbled the ball, Calcagni hustled into third with a headlong dive.

Battista, meanwhile, raced around to third, beating the throw, which allowed Ryan to take second. That set up an interesting dilemma for Boys' Club coach Steve Smith. With cleanup hitter Coppola coming up with first base open and no outs, he had to decide whether to order the free pass or pitch to him. The walk would normally seem in order, but that would mean pitching to the ever-dangerous Greg Larson with the bases loaded.

Smith decided he'd rather have Haggie face Coppola with two men on, but the first offering was just a little too fat, and Coppola drilled it deep to center. Alex DeNucci had no trouble going back and making the catch, but couldn't even attempt a throw to the plate as Battista scored the winning run standing up.

Haggie got Larson and Sean McClellan to ground out, but the damage was done and with darkness approaching, it was obvious that the Boys' Club was down to its last chance.

First game

Our Lady's added another chapter to what's becoming the Cinderella story of the National League playoffs with a 10-3 victory over the Boys' Club in the opening game of the finals.

Anthony Calcagni survived a shaky start to shut down the Boys' Club on three hits over the last six innings, and was backed by a 13-hit attack as his teammates battered losing pitcher Sam Lookner for seven runs in three innings.

Calcagni was handed a 4-0 lead before he stepped on the mound, but still looked like he might not last through the first, as he was whacked around for three runs himself. Colin Ryan followed singles by Alex DeNucci and Jim Proia with a triple down the right-field line to cut the lead in half. When Ryan scored on Mitch Nash's ground ball, it was a one-run game.

From that point on, however, Calcagni was magnificent. He gave up a single to Joe Proia in the second, then was unhittable until the seventh, when he tired. By then, he was sitting on a seven-run lead, so when the Boys' Club loaded the bases with two outs, panic was a long way off. Calcagni managed to come up with a good pitch to cleanup hitter Ryan to end the game on a popup to catcher Evan Galanis.

In addition to nailing down the win with his grab of that pop, Galanis was one of the offensive heroes. He roped three hits, including a double, and drove in a run from the ninth spot in the order. He had plenty of help, as four players had two hits apiece. Frank Battista drove in a trio of runs, and Chris Bercury and Sean McClellan had two each.

Most of the damage came off Lookner, as the Boys' Club got an excellent relief performance from Bruce Anderson. The 16-year-old kept his club in the game by wiggling out of several jams, but Calcagni's showing on the other side made the effort fruitless.

It was obvious from the first inning on that the Our Lady's hitters were having little trouble timing Lookner's off-speed assortment. Though the Boys' Club committed two errors to aid the four-run inning for Our Lady's, there were several solid shots as well.

The big blow was a two-run triple by McClellan, which capped the rally. There was nothing tainted about that blast, as it sailed deep into the night in left-center.

Greg Larson (single) and Bercury (sacrifice fly) also drove in runs in that inning.

Blanchard fans 11 in East win

NEWTON — Joe Blanchard struck out 11 and walked none as Newton East strapped North Weymouth, 5-2, Sunday for its first victory in the Braintree National Youth League Baseball Tournament.

Blanchard, a new arrival from the Newton North league, earned his paycheck Sunday as he allowed two solo homers but nothing much more in keeping East alive in the double-elimination tourney.

The 12-year-old righty allowed a single in addition to the two dingers, and he faced just four batters over the limit. Another Weymouth base runner reached on an error.

Dan Hausmann led the offense with two singles, a pair of walks, and three runs scored. He came home on a Bob O'Toole single in the first, scored on a Dave DiStefino sacrifice fly in the third, then reached safety on a Blanchard single in the fifth.

Saturday, Newton East lost to Parkway, 9-5, as Matt McCue was hit for five third-inning runs.

East will play on Saturday against the winner of Wednesday's Brockton-Holbrook contest.

Fischbach shines

Steve Fischbach clobbered a three-run homer in the first inning and Matt McCue and David DiStefino combined to shut down the Needham offense as Newton East moved one step closer to a Division II Championship with a 5-3 victory Monday in Southeast Baseball Tournament play.

Fishbach's three-run dinger in the opening frame put Newton up to stay. With DiStefino on first via a fielder's choice, Bob O'Toole walked to set the stage for Fishbach, who drove one over the fence in center field.

McCue added a solo homer in the fourth inning before handing the ball over to DiStefino, who hurled two innings of no-hit ball to post the save.

International League playoffs

Spagnuolo hurls Cubs into finals

NEWTON — John Spagnuolo tossed a four-hitter, retiring six of the last seven batters he faced, as the Oak Hill Cubs belted the Auburndale Warriors, 4-1, Friday to advance to the Newton International League Murphy Division finals.

Oak Hill won the best-of-three series two games to advance into the Murphy Division finals against the Troubadour Club.

The 15-year old Spagnuolo hurled shutout ball for three innings while the Cubs spotted him a three-run lead.

A run-scoring single by Harley Malter and a sacrifice fly by Spagnuolo produced a 2-0 lead after one inning, and Scott Devore scored on a Malter ground out in the third.

The Warriors got one run back in the fourth, but it was their only run off Spagnuolo. The righthander walked John Salemme, then pitched a run-scoring double to Doug Micchatuono.

Malter again figured in the Oak Hill scoring, beating out a grounder in the sixth before advancing on a balk and scoring on an error.

Warriors even series

Tuesday night, the Auburndale Warriors had little or nothing to do with a come-from-behind effort that resulted in a tie with the Oak Hill Cubs in game two of their playoff.

Trailing, 12-8, entering the bottom of the sixth, Auburndale gladly accepted four walks and a couple of fielding errors as substitutes for base hits. In all, the Warriors walked 17 times, needing only seven singles to prolong the best-of-three Murphy Division series.

Wednesday, however, the Auburndale bats had something to say. The Warriors pounded out 14 hits, accepting 16 walks this time, to smother Oak Hill, 22-7, at West Newton Common.

It took another come-from-behind effort by Auburndale to make this one a reality, as errors and timely hits by Oak Hill put Warrior starter Mike Armstrong in a 7-1 hole early.

Oak Hill started the game with a bang when Scott Devore tripled to leadoff and, two Auburndale errors later, held a 2-0 edge. Brian White made it 3-0 with a run-scoring single before Armstrong escaped the inning.

Following a John Salemme RBI-fielder's choice in the bottom of the first, Oak Hill shot back to score four more runs to boost the lead, 7-1.

Armstrong loaded the bases with one out before key RBI-singles by Harley Malter and John Spagnuolo got things going for the Cubs.

The night turned sour for Oak Hill shortly after that, as starter White walked three straight men to open the second, sending the Warriors on their way to an eight-run inning.

Stephen Nielson relieved White at that point, but yet another walk, this time to Andrew Hayes, forced in a run. Nielson found the plate after that, but when the ball got there, there was usually an Auburndale bat waiting. Six of the next seven batters hit safely, as the Warriors sent 12 men to the plate.

Matt Scales had the biggest blow, a bases-loaded double that accounted for three of his five runs-batted-in for the evening.

Alan Crockett also began a big night for him, stroking an RBI single. He finished with three hits and four RBIs.

Auburndale scored four more in the third and capped the night with nine in the fifth. Again the Warriors went on a streak in that frame, as 11 consecutive men reached base with two outs via a walk or a hit.

Meanwhile, Armstrong recovered nicely from the shaky start. The 14-year-old righty set down the side in order in the third, fourth and fifth, and would have repeated the feat in the sixth but for a pair of errors behind him.

Berlandi hits cycle

Brian Berlandi won't soon forget Tuesday night. Not because his team, Troubadour, squashed Albemarle Club, 15-7, to advance to the finals, but because he accomplished a feat not many major-leaguers will ever do.

Berlandi, a 15-year-older from St. Paul's School in Concord, N.H., hit for the cycle Tuesday at Albemarle Field, capping his once-in-a-lifetime feat with a seventh inning home run.

Berlandi tripled with the bases loaded in the first inning, singled home a run in the fourth, and doubled home two in the sixth before smashing the home run that completed his night.

His seven RBI alone tied the total output by Albemarle Club. His four hits were only two less than the whole Albemarle team. Berlandi even drove in the game-winner, so it would be safe to say that the catcher had a part in Troubadour's series clincher.

C&K sweeps

David Annese drove home four runs as C&K Components beat the Boys' Club, 9-3, to gain a sweep in the Copp Division semifinal at Newton North High.

The victory sends C&K into the divisional finals to be played this week against Carson Post, but it also avenges a series-sweep suffered last season at the hands of the Boys' Club.

Monday, C&K rallied from a 7-1 deficit to take the first game, but Tuesday it never trailed. Three runs in the bottom of the first and two more in both the second and third innings put C&K up, 7-3, and there was no looking back.

Boys' Club managed four runs in the top of the sixth to tie the score, but the game was called because of darkness after C&K scored two in the bottom half, and none of the runs counted.

Annese tripled to the gap in right-center to drive in the eventual game-winner in the first inning. Ron Pang made it 3-1 with a single that scored Annese.

A Tom Donnellan RBI-double and a Pang RBI-single provided the offense in the second, and Annese singled home two in the third.

Jim McMillen added a two-run double in the fifth.

Boys' Club struck first, scoring on a double steal by George Maxcey and Doug Leone in the first inning.

Carson Post wins

Steve Lookner singled to center to score Peter LaCamera, snapping a 6-all tie in the sixth inning as Carson Post pulled off an upset sweep of first-place Post 440 in the Copp Division semifinal round.

Carson Post, the fourth-place finisher in the Copp Division, will play C&K Components in next week's final.

With LaCamara aboard on an infield error and a stolen base, Jason DeGeorge flew out to advance the runner to third. With two outs, Lookner belted his second hit of the game to win it.

C&K starter Mike Fiske then took the hill and fanned one batter before getting two quick ground outs to shortstop DeGeorge to end the game.

Post 440 scored two in the top of the first before Carson Post rallied for four runs. A two-run single by Lookner sparked the inning, and Rob Wilkinson scored in run down while Fiske came home on a dropped fly ball.

Post 440 took its second lead of the game in the fourth on RBI-singles by Paul Melanson and Ivo Rufo, but a two-run single in the bottom of the fifth by Brian Rooney knotted things for the second time.

Pachus honored

Chris Pachus of Williams College was named to the Third All New England Team as designated hitter. The West Newton sophomore, A 1984 graduate of Newton North High School, completed the past season with a .408 batting average and 25 runs-batted-in. He is the son of Thomas and Katherine Pachus of 35 Pickwick Rd., West Newton.

North softball future promising

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Outside of a rather large void in the middle of the infield, Newton North will return virtually intact a softball team which went to the tournament this season.

Three starters are gone from this spring's 12-7 club, including shortstop Robin Silver and second baseman Liz Speliotis. Right fielder Jen Quigley is the other graduated starter, with Courtney Ford rounding out this year's seniors. Ford missed most of the season with a knee injury.

"Shortstop will be the biggest void," admitted Coach Carolyn Harrington, who led her club to a second-place tie with Waltham in the Suburban League. She expects the fight at that spot to be "wide open."

The coach looks at this season as a pleasant surprise. She knew that next year the club should be better.

"We had a better than expected season," she said. "The tournament was a bonus. That will help. The kids know what it's all about and they'll shoot high. This year's club was committed to qualifying. Other sports during the year get them used to winning."

Among those used to winning are players making up a complete battery. The Tigers used two junior pitchers this year in Nancy Sullivan and Sharon Silva, and another 11th-grader, Felicia Moschella, held down the catching post.

On the mound, Sullivan was the North mainstay. She earned almost all of the Newton decisions, though she did seem to tire toward the end of the season.

Silva, on the other hand, came on strong at the end, as she got more comfortable on the mound. The development of Silva should make for some healthy competition next year.

"They're both competitors," said Harrington. "It brings out the best in both of them."

The coach would like to see them work on a windmill delivery in the off-season. More and more high school pitchers are going to the windmill for speed and control, as opposed to the slingshot delivery.

Moschella performed "above and beyond the call of duty" behind the plate, according to Harrington. "Her job was defense and she really held her own. She handles pitchers well." The coach expects Moschella's bat to improve as a senior.

Unlike the middle of the infield, the corners are pretty well set.

Sophomore Jen Heesch was "improving every game" at first base by the end of the season, according to Harrington. Heesch had a little bit of trouble adjusting to varsity play early on, but overcame that by the second half.

Over at third, Marie Farrar is a player who can do it all. She's got a very strong arm, and plays the bunt extremely well. She can hit with power or lay down a bunt, depending on the situation.

Best of all is Farrar's "great game sense," said Harrington. "She has a good idea of the whole game."

With the exception of Quigley, the outfield is back intact. Silva holds down left when she's not on the mound. She has good speed, and swings a powerful bat in the middle of the lineup.

Center fielder Wendy Rogers might be the key to the whole team next spring. She's a leader in every sense of the word, both by action and words. The junior can play any position, according to the coach, who thought she'd be best utilized in center. She even filled in for Moschella behind the plate when needed.

"She's a super athlete," said Harrington of the senior-to-be. "She tracks the ball down and has a good arm. She comes to play."

Rogers will also be counted upon to take a big share of the offensive load.

A prime prospect for that vacant job in right is Megan Morahan. Only a freshman, Harrington had her working out at shortstop early in the season, but the coach feels the outfield is her best spot. Morahan really came along as the year progressed, and should be ready to step in full-time as a sophomore.

Jody Rogers is another freshman who should see more work next spring. She served as designated hitter regularly by season's end.

"She can hit the heck out of the ball," Harrington said.

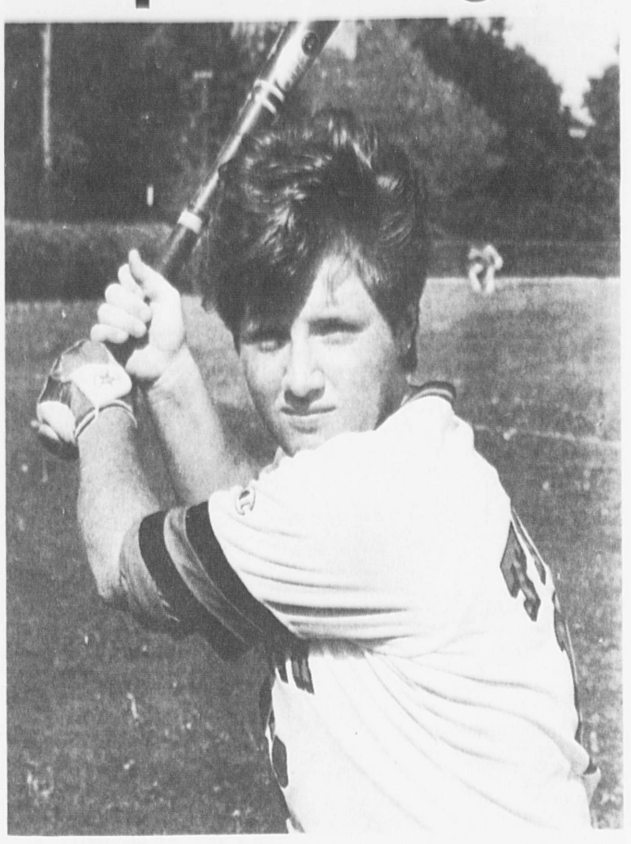

Rogers might be a candidate for the shortstop post as a sophomore.

Another player who could figure in the picture is Diane Tormey. Though she didn't play as a sophomore this year, she was the starting left fielder as a freshman. This spring, she went to France on a school trip and never came out for the club, but Harrington has talked to her and Tormey expects to be back next spring. Her speed would make Tormey a solid leadoff hitter.

Freshman Heather Hughes saw some playing time for the varsity this year and will be a factor in the battle at second. A very good fielder, Hughes "exudes self-confidence," said the coach.

Sophomore Joanna Tormey hurt her leg early this season but should be ready to help next spring. She'll provide depth on the mound and in the infield.

The tournament may have been a pleasant surprise this season, but it will be a goal from day one next year. The team will be experienced and talented, though teams like Brockton and North Quincy should provide a stiff challenge.

Jody Rogers adds thump to the attack

A letter of recommendation is requested and may be forward to Isabel Beatty, 310 Lowell Ave., Newton MA 02160.

The deadline is Aug. 13.

Newton swimmers capture 'B' Regionals championship

DEDHAM — Strength in the relays enabled the Newton Recreation Swim Team to capture the "B" Regionals Championship Saturday at the Dedham pool.

Newton accumulated 246 points to nose out Sherborn, runnerup with 205 points. After the butterfly and freestyle events Newton was in third place, but the Garden City swimmers moved into second place after the breaststroke and then vaukted into the lead for keeps.

The Newton Rec Team currently has an 8-1 record in the league and will host the "A" Regionals next Saturday.

Newton placed third overall in the Mile Swim held at Sherborn's Farm Pond on July 25. Jim Robertson placed third for the boys, the highest place for Newton in recent years. The summary:

Kinsella earns letter

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Jacqueline Kinsella, a native of Newton and a graduate of Newton North High School, was recently awarded a varsity letter for her participation on the Providence College women's soccer team, at the school's annual banquet.

Under the direction of second year coach Gerry Guay, the Lady Friars ended their season with an overall mark of 6-9-1. Impressive victories for the lady booters included a 1-0 shutout of the WRams of Rhode Island as well as a 6-0 whitewashing of Boston University.

Newton's Huntington picked to row with U.S. crew team

NEWTON — Henry Huntington's summer vacation has already taken him to Houston, and the 22-year-old Newton resident will see St. Catharines, Ontario, and England before the seasons change.

Huntington has been selected to row with the lightweight eight crew team for the United States, which has just finished an Olympic Festival in Houston and is gearing for the World Championships in England in mid-August.

It was back in July when Huntington attended a training camp in Philadelphia for the purpose of selecting four teams to represent the country. Huntington had just finished an outstanding junior year at Princeton University where he acted as stroke for the crew team that lost just once during the season, and the 22-year old made the cuts.

Henry Huntington

At the Olympic Festival in Houston, where some 40,000 various athletes competed, Huntington's team did not fair well, but the team had been together only a short while.

World Championship.

In England, Huntington's lightweights will compete against five other crew teams in a 2,000-meter race, with the winners of each heat advancing to the next round and the losers rowing in the repocharge. Teams will continue with the process until six or eight teams remain to race in the final race for the lightweight championship. The lightweight crew must average 155 pounds and no man on the team can weigh more than 160 pounds.

On Saturday, Huntington and his mates will travel to St. Catharines for the Canadien Henley, an international competition, before heading to the Huntington's father Samuel crewed at Harvard in 1961, and several of Huntington's cousins also crew, sparking Henry's interest in the sport.

QUINCY — A funeral mass was celebrated Saturday at 10 a.m. in St. John's Church, Quincy, for Mary W. (Hughes) Dunn, 86, of Quincy. Interment was in New Calvary Cemetery, Boston.

Locally she leaves her daughter, Sister Therese Dunn, CSJ, of Newton. She also is survived by her other children, James J. Jr. of Georgia, Robert E. of Quincy, Virginia McGrath of Wollaston; her sister, Margaret Hughes of Wollaston; 10 grandchildren and a great-grandchild.

A native of Boston, she had lived in Dorchester before moving to Quincy 15 years ago.

Lawrence R. Kelly

Retired employee of U. S. Postal Service

NEWTON — The funeral of Lawrence R. Kelly of Newton, formerly of Brighton, a retired employee of the U. S. Postal Service, was held Saturday from the J. Warren Sullivan Funeral Home, 35 Henshaw St., Brighton, followed by a funeral mass in St. Columbkille's Church, Brighton. Interment was in St. Joseph's Cemetery.

Mr. Kelly had been a member of the Brighton Knights of Columbus Council 121, St. Columbkille's Holy Name Society and American Legion Post 17.

He leaves his wife, Marion (Fitzpatrick) Kelly; his children, Patricia of Newton, James E. of Ashland, Mrs. Judith Ciccariello of Waltham and three grandchildren.

Herman Kramer, 70

Worked for Forester Manufacturers

NEWTON — The funeral of Herman Kramer, 70, of Newton, was held Tuesday afternoon in the Stanetsky Memorial Chapels, Brookline. Interment was in Linwood Memorial Park, Randolph.

Born in Brockton, he had lived for many years in Everett and was a graduate of Everett High School and of the Franklin Union School of Pharmacy.

He had been the owner of the Kramer Pharmacy in Somerville until 1948, when he joined his family's clothing business, Forester Manufacturers in Everett, as a sales executive.

Mr. Kramer was an active member of the United Boston Children's Wear Show and the Israel Numismatic Society of Massachusetts and a founding member of Cerebral Palsy of Greater Boston.

Jean (Bronstein) Cotton

NEWTON UPPER FALLS — A funeral service for Jean (Bronstein) Cotton of Newton Upper Falls, formerly of Brookline and Baltimore, Md., was held Monday morning in the Levine Chapel, Brookline.

Mary A. (Norton) Harlow, 93

NEWTON — The funeral of Mary Agnes (Norton) Harlow, 93, of Framingham, formerly of Newton, was held Monday from the Martin E. Conroy and Son Funeral Home, 439 Washington St., Newton, followed by a funeral mass at Our Lady's Church at 11 a.m. Interment was in Newton Cemetery.

Mrs. Harlow died Thursday at Framingham Union Hospital.

Born in Newton, she had been a resident of Newton for many years prior to moving to Framingham several years ago.

The sister of the late, Christopher, Edward and Harold Norton, Elizabeth Bagshaw, Anna Hays, Mabel Cronin and Alice Fournier, she leaves her son, Robert N. Harlow of Framingham; her brother and her sisters, Warren Norton and Helen Murphy, both of Newton, Louise Ramirez of Belmont; three grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Dorothy (Milton) Shapiro, 68

Benefactor of BU, Brandeis, Dartmouth

BROOKLINE — A funeral service was held Tuesday afternoon in the Stanetsky Memorial Chapel, Brookline, for Dorothy (Milton) Shapiro, 68, of Palm Beach, Fla., and Chestnut Hill.

Born in Boston, she moved to Chestnut Hill eight years ago. She was a graduate of Brookline High School and attended Emerson College.

Mrs. Shapiro endowed the Joel Neal Shapiro fund in the name of her deceased son at Dartmouth, a dormitory at Brandeis that bears her name, and a dental laboratory at the Boston University School of Dentistry.

A life member of Beth Israel and Brookline Hospitals, she also had been a Golden Patron at New England Sinai Hospital, Stoughton, and was a benefactor of the Recuperative Center, Roslindale.

She was a founder of Mt. Sinai Hospital, Miami Beach, and a major benefactor of St. Mary's Hospital, West Palm Beach, where she endowed an interfaith pavillion.

She also endowed an auditorium in the Jewish Home for the Aged, West Palm Beach, and during the 1960s, chaired the State of Israel Ambassadors Ball for Israel Bonds and was active in the Women's Division of Combined Jewish Philanthropies in Boston as well as in the Jewish Federation of Palm Beach.

She leaves her husband, Arnold Shapiro; her children, Douglas A. and Marjorie Narins, both of Weston; her brothers, Alfred Milton of Revere, Richard Milton of New Brunswick, N. J.; her sister, Arlene Silverman of Chelmsford; her mother, Ida Milton of Boston and five grandchildren.

Patricia F. (Flynn) Grinnell, 46

BELMONT — A funeral mass was celebrated Friday at 10 a.m. in St. Luke's Church, Belmont, for Patricia F. (Flynn) Grinnell, 46, of Belmont, a clerk in the offices of the Belmont town treasurer for 16 years. Burial was in Belmont Cemetery.

Born in Boston, she was a graduate of Mission Church High School, Roxbury, and had lived in Belmont for 17 years.

Jr. and Julie A. Grinnell, both of Belmont; her sisters, Anna Beliveau of N. H., Elizabeth Flynn of Monson, Josephine Hayes of Chestnut Hill.

Fighting NF is a family affair

This widespread genetic disorder is not well known — but the Krugs are changing that

By Charlotte Meryman

When Patricia Krug's daughter Kelly was diagnosed as having neurofibromatosis eight years ago, there was no research being done on the genetic disorder, no public awareness of its prevalence, and no fundraising underway to help find a cause and a cure.

Now, thanks in large part to the efforts of Dedham resident Krug and her family, the Massachusetts chapter of the National Neurofibromatosis (NF) Foundation is the most active in the country, with its 1,500 members raising over $60,000 for research last year alone. For the past four years, Gov. Michael Dukakis has declared May as NF Awareness month. And this year, the state chapter recruited Boston Celtics Coach K.C. Jones to publicize its cause and its annual canister drive.

Even so, says Krug, there's still a long way to go in fighting the disorder.

One in every 3,000 children is born with NF. It affects both sexes and every racial and ethnic group. World-wide, it is more common than muscular dystrophy, Tay-Sachs disease and cystic fibrosis combined. About 50 percent of NF cases are hereditary — the other 50 percent are the result of spontaneous gene mutation, with no way to predict their occurence.

Over 100,000 people in the U.S. alone have the disorder, and some of those with the most severe cases may die from complications associated with it.

Often called von Recklinghausen's Disease after the German physician who first recognized it in 1882, NF can affect the nervous system, muscles, bones and skin. It is most often characterized by the presence of cafe-au-lait spots — areas of mild skin pigmentation — and the formation of multiple soft tumors or neurofibromas. Other manifestations can include congenital bone defects, tumors of the optic, acoustic and spinal nerves — which can result in blindness, deafness and paralysis — scoliosis or curvature of the spine, and head enlargement, as well as learning disabilities and high blood pressure.

These symptoms often involve disfigurement or deformities, which add to the emotional and psychological stress of the disease.

But one of the most frightening aspects of NF is its unpredictability. Although the disorder is not always progressive, additional effects often develop during puberty and, in women, during pregnancy. There is no way to be sure that a mild case today will still be a mild case a year from today.

All this, Krug learned when her daughter was diagnosed as having NF at the age of four months. She has spent most of the intervening years working to publicize NF and its symptoms and raise funds for research into the disorder. Although she still works part-time as a lab technician, she says she has basically given up that career to work with the NF Foundation.

The main thrust of NF research now is in identifying genes closely linked to the disorder and using them as a stepping stone to track down the NF gene or genes, says Newton resident Dr. Bruce Korf, director of the NF Clinic at Children's Hospital and a member of the advisory board for the state NF chapter. The hope is that finding the gene will assist in diagnosis, early detection, and, eventually, in treatment of NF.

Korf's clinic provides diagnostic, follow-up, treatment and genetic counseling services to NF sufferers. It aids researchers by locating large families with numerous NF cases, needed for gene tracking.

Mass. General Hospital also operates an NF Clinic, directed by neurosurgeon Dr. Robert Martuza, who also serves on the state NF advisory board. Often, reconstructive or cosmetic surgery and radiation are the only treatment for NF symptoms.

Kelly Krug was born with an optic glioma — a tumor affecting the visual nerve in her left eye. She also had the telltale birthmarks. Now eight and a half and in the third grade at Riverdale elementary school, she already has had six operations, including three to remove her bad eye, reconstruct bone deformities around the socket and install an artificial eye.

During the surgery, the doctors discovered brain tumors. And last year, when Kelly saw an orthopedic surgeon for her legs, which are different lengths, he found she also has tumors in her abdomen.

No one in Kelly's family had ever been diagnosed as having NF before. Her older sister and brother are both healthy and athletic. "My older girl is a sprinter and has the fastest 220 in the Bay State League," remarks Pat Krug with a mixture of pride and pain, "and Kelly can barely run."

Krug says she and her husband were unable to learn much about NF for the first two years after Kelly was diagnosed. Then she heard about the Massachusetts chapter of the NF Foundation. The second chapter in the country, it was founded in 1979.

"When I found out about the organization, I thought somebody was already doing research and there was a big organization and all I could do was pay my dues," she recalls. She quickly learned otherwise. She also learned a lot more about what NF really means.

"I went to the first meeting and there were people telling me all about their children and themselves and it was very scary," she says. "But it made you realize that somebody had to do something about this disease — and that's the satisfaction that you get, that you can do something about fighting this." At that same meeting, she was appointed fundraiser.

"I think it was meant to be that Kelly is here and that I do this work," Krug says.

She pulls back the door of a small, floor-to-ceiling closet in her kitchen packed with papers and boxes and files — her NF closet, she explains. It is located right next to the two kitchen telephones — one for her family and one for NF. Although Krug's two years as president of the state chapter ended last year, she still spends roughly 40 hours a week on foundation work — talking to new members who call for information, handling correspondence and giving talks to a variety of medical, professional and community organizations with current president and active member Karen Peluso.

Krug brings out a small, framed paper from the closet. It is a note from Kelly given to her not long ago: "Dear Mom, you have the best job — the name of it is NF. Love, Kelly." Below Kelly's signature are three hearts bearing the words "I love you, Mom," and the names of her other two children and her husband.

The whole family pitches in to help Krug. Her mother, Ruth Vey, and her sister Jeanne Vey are now in charge of publicity for the state NF chapter, and another sister, Maureen Kraby, is treasurer.

A lively blond with a nearly incessant smile, Kelly herself has appeared on a state-wide television commercial, in a video, and on a poster with K.C. Jones. "It's fun," Kelly says of her publicity efforts. She says she likes "to talk about it, that people never heard of NF."

On June 20, Kelly's godfather, Dennis Crowley, and his friends held the second annual Kelly Krug Golf Tournament at Norwood Country Club. Their efforts raised $6,600 for the Massachusetts NF chapter.

The organization also raised $40,000 this year by raffling off a trip to Zurich for two and is hosting another golf tournament, this one in K.C. Jones' name, on September 19 at Bolton Valley.

'I've learned to accept it and deal with it. I know what the problems are, but I just tuck them away and enjoy her every day.'

Patricia Krug

It is noon and Kelly, home from school for lunch, is racing around the house collecting her prizes from the school fair to show her visitor, and doing somersaults on the living room floor. She particularly delights in squirming and giggling as her mother tries to comb her hair for a photograph.

"Did I mention that she's a pain?" Krug teases. Kelly gives her a hug as they settle into their positions for the camera.

Framed there, flashing her impish grin, Kelly seems indomitable.

"She's often said, 'I wish I didn't have NF,'" says Krug of her daughter. "And we just say, 'We wish you didn't either, but we'll always be here for you.'

"We just live day by day, hoping she won't have to suffer any real ...," Krug trails off, her eyes wandering and her mind searching through the unthinkable. Then she shakes her head with finality. "I just don't want her to suffer, period.

"I've learned to accept it and deal with it," she says softly. "I know what the problems are, but I just tuck them away and enjoy her every day.

"No sense worrying about the future."

Home-office deductions OK for some

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

My main source of income comes from my position as an employee of a large company. However, I have a second "job" — I invest in real estate, which provides a small amount of additional income. How will the IRS look upon deductions taken for an office in my home, if the office is only used for the administration of my real estate investments?

E.S., W. Roxbury

Dear E.S.:

An increasing number of people have two or more sources of income, and as in your case, they often administer the second source from home. Your question is this: Can the expense of maintaining a subsidiary business home-office be deducted from federal income taxes?

The answer is a definite yes. Because the IRS rules now allow a deduction for home-office expenses when part of the taxpayer's home is exclusively used on a regular basis as the principal place of business.

If there is one area of which the IRS regularly cracks down, it is the deduction for home-office expenses. Over the years, the rules have constantly been changed. The IRS sets guidelines that must be met by a taxpayer in order to be entitled to the home-office deduction, only to see that some imaginative taxpayer has found a way around them. Current rules virtually end the home-office deduction for all persons except outside salespersons and professionals such a physicians, attorneys, manufacturers reps, accountants, etc., who maintain permanent a place for that same business elsewhere.

Specifically, the rules now state that a deduction for home-office expenses will be allowed only to the extent they apply to a part of a taxpayer's home exclusively used on a regular basis by the taxpayer:

(a) as a principal place of business;

In addition, a taxpayer may also deduct expenses that apply to space within his home that is used on a regular basis to store inventory or for use in the taxpayer's trade or business of selling products at retail or wholesale. But only if the taxpayer's home is the only fixed location of the trade or business.

(b) as a place of business used by the taxpayer's patients, cleints or customers in meeting or dealing with the taxpayer in the normal course of the taxpayer's trade;

(c) in connection with the taxpayer's business, if it is a separate structure that is not attached to the home.

The rules are tough, but if you qualify you will find the tax savings generated by home-office expenses can really add up. What follows is a checklist of at least partially deductible expenses:

Fuel; fire and liability insurance; exterior painting; electricity; telephone; cleaning; exterior repairs; interior repairs; depreciation on office furniture; depreciation on home and driveway.

Make sure you check "Yes" or "No" on Line G, Schedule C to Form 1040 to indicate whether the taxpayer is or is not claiming home office deductions.

Auto center celebrates anniversary

NEWTON — Richard Blagden, owner of the MAACO Auto Painting and Bodyworks Center at 238R Walnut Street in Newton is celebrating his tenth anniversary as a MAACO shop owner. He has painted and repaired 12,568 cars in the decade.

Those cars required 15,710 gallons of paint and 956 miles of masking tape. Stacked end on end to the sky, these 12,568 cars would stretch into the ionosphere.

Bladgen attributes his success to the "quality paint job and reasonable prices" which he says are trademarks of MAACO workmanship. MAACO is the world's largest franchise chain of its kind.

Centre Place retail store block sold

Centre Place is a fully tenanted, recently renovated, single story 6,350 square foot retail block. It is located at 208-214 Sumner Street.

Construction company changes name

NEWTON— CEI Construction, Inc. has changed its name to the Clark Construction Group. The name change has no effect on the personnel or operation of the company.

Company makes videotape for Prime

NEWTON — Reunion Productions, Inc. completed a videotape for Prime Computer's S.A.M.M.I.E. software program, which is a Computer-Aided Design system. Prime will use the video tape to introduce the system to new markets.

Fred Schilpp and Adam Villone, principals of Reunion, wrote and produced a seven-minute dramatization stressing the system's application potential in every design situation. With the S.A.M.M.I.E. system, designers can build simulations of designs in the computer and changes in the designs, thus saving time and money.

Stellar Computer opens its doors in Highlands

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

NEWTON HIGHLANDS— The atmosphere is calm and the air has that new-building smell to it. Carpeted partitions separate sparsely-furnished offices. Every now and then, blue-jean clad men in their thirties can be seen padding about on the thick, plush carpeting.

The office looks and feels like a new computer firm. And, indeed, Stellar Computer Inc. is in business, but barely. The firm — started by Apollo and Prime Computer founder J. William Poduska — only opened its 100 Wells Ave., Newton, doors in February. It has 42 employees.

Although Wang is laying off employees and Apollo is in a slump, next year, says Arthur Carr, company president, Stellar hopes to grow to at least 100 employees, and to nearly 200 during the year after that.

Stellar, on the other hand, will be producing high-performance super computers for scientists and engineers.

In the scientific and engineering computer field, "We don't see the same competition," Edmunds said. The Stellar computer will have graphics, allowing users to perform 3-D and molecular modeling.

"It's a unique product," he said.

According to Carr, computers like this now cost between $700,000 to $2 million. But Stellar will charge only $100,000 for the computer.

The firm will have to sell a lot of computers to pay back its investors. Podusky started the company with $2 million, and three venture capitalist firms are also investing in the firm.

In two to four years, Carr said, the firm will "go public," placing its name on the stock exchange

Board okays Iodice plan for office building

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — After more than nine months of delays, developer Michael Iodice is one step closer to winning final aldermanic approval of his plans for a garage and office building on Crafts Street.

The Aldermanic Land Use Committee voted last week to approve Iodice's site plans for the garage, to be built in conjunction with an office building at 36 Crafts St.

But before the Board of Aldermen can vote on the decision favoring Iodice, the Law Department will have to make a ruling on a set of legal opinions presented by Alderman Bruce Carmichael.

Carmichael has vowed to continue his fight against the site plan on the grounds that the building moratorium passed earlier this year prohibits such construction.

Carmichael has argued that the moratorium is a dimensional control, which would prohibit Iodice from building the office and garage because the site plan was filed after the moratorium became law.

Iodice has argued he can build because he filed a perimeter plan, protecting the zoning status of the land for three years, prior to the moratorium's implementation.

Carmichael introduced a set of legal opinions and case histories which he claimed proves the moratorium should prohibit Iodice from building.

Carmichael's brief, prepared by an attorney whose name he refused to reveal, contradicts an earlier Law Department ruling that the moratorium is a use regulation and would allow Iodice to build, pending aldermanic approval.

Under city charter, aldermen can only recommend changes to a site plan, a set of designs including height, setback and landscaping of a given parcel. City charter prohibits aldermanic denial of a site plan, but parliamentary maneuvering has delayed action on Iodice's petition since first introduced in October.

Planning Director Barry Canner estimated between 15 and 20 perimeter plans have been filed since the moratorium was implemented in March.

Last night's vote came with the understanding that the Law Department will have an answer to Carmichael's legal opinion and unnamed lawyer before the full board votes on the issue Aug. 11.

Couple criticizes 10 percent ordinance

On architect Laurence Cutler's desk in his Cambridge office sits a battery operated game called Playful Penguins. The game consists of three or four plastic penguins who inch their way up an incline, only to fall back down a chute when they get to the top. The plight of the penguins in the game, according to Cutler, serves as a metaphor for his attempt to convert a two-family building on Church Street into a three-unit condominium.

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Laurence and Sherrie Cutler have petitioned the Board of Aldermen for one unit more than what they can build by right at 120 Church St.

The bonus unit is a two-bedroom, 788-square-foot apartment they are offering for $159,000. While they are willing to contribute money to the city's low-income housing pool, the Cutlers say aldermen, by asking for too much money, are defeating the purpose of ordinances designed to increase that pool.

"Every time we think we are getting to the top, we wind up back on the bottom again," Laurence says, pointing to the Playful Penguins game. "If the city really wants to find affordable housing, then they have to do something about the way they ask for contributions under the 10 Percent Ordinance."

Cutler says he thought he was in the clear after the Law Department ruled that Ordinance 30 conversions, designed to protect the city's older homes by allowing the owners to convert space for apartments to derive extra income, do not require contributions under the 10 Percent ordinance.

The aldermanic Land Use Committee ignored the Law Department's ruling and asked Cutler for a contribution of $17,500. That fee, Cutler says, is unfair because he is only asking for one bonus unit.

"We would wind up paying as much as someone building as many as nine bonus units, because that figure represents 10 percent of the average selling price of one unit. It would be more equitable to have a flat fee for every bonus unit."

An aldermanic subcommittee will make its long-awaited recommendations for changing the ordinance and issue a report to the board in September. Scheduled for a board vote later that month, lobbying by all sides should be intense, because there are many people with an opinion on how the final version should look.

Cutler suggests the city charge small-scale developers based on the number of units they are seeking above what is allowed by right in a particular zone. Under his plan, a developer seeking nine bonus units would pay nine times as much as someone seeking one.

Cutler, long an advocate of low-income housing, says Newton officials do more harm than good by asking for such a high contribution.

"The way to increase the amount of affordable housing in this city is not to scare off the small developer," he says. "I checked the Sunday Globe last week and the average selling price of two-bedroom units listed there was $303,000. We are selling ours for $159,000. To tell you the truth, after what we've been through, I would never again consider converting an old home because of all the problems involved."

Cutler says the city should think about the big picture, rather than attempting to squeeze as much from individual developers as possible.

"If you really want to create affordable housing, and preserve the city's older homes at the same time, you have to find a more equitable method for seeking contributions to the low-income housing pool. There are no federal programs to do this, so you have to make it more attractive on the municipal level."

Cutler advocates easing up restrictions on accessory apartments. By allowing those who own older homes to use interior space for accessory apartments, Cutler says the city will increase the housing stock and preserve older homes.

By forcing developers seeking Ordinance 30 conversions to "pay through the nose," Cutler says it will encourage the creation of fewer, larger and more expensive units. That, he says, will deny seniors, low-income families and singles the ability to live in Newton.

"I know developers who have told me they are discouraged by what we have gone through," Cutler says. "Most of the people who have contacted us about the two-bedroom unit want it either for a grandmother who can no longer take care of a large home but wants to stay in the city, or a young person who is looking for their first place."

In addition to discouraging affordable housing, Cutler says the current confusion over both the 10 Percent and Ordinance 30 conversion laws will have a negative effect on the character of the city's single-family zones.

"There are many areas in this city with old homes that could be destroyed if the board makes it infeasible to convert them to accessory apartments," he says, pointing out sparsely populated areas on a map. "Once one person decides to level an older home to build multi-family dwelling units, it spreads and you lose the single-family character of the neighborhood.

"The way it is now, these older homes are almost amoral for an empty-nester to live in because of the cost of maintaining it," he adds. "These homes would also be too expensive for starter homes. Our home on Church Street is large enough to split into four units. We are only asking for three, one unit over what we could build by right. There are many homes like this in the city."

Senior menu

NEWTON — West Suburban Elder Services, Inc. in cooperation with the Council on Aging, administers nutrition sites at the Newton Senior Center (552-7178), the Newton Corner Senior Drop-In Center (969-8030), the Nonantum Multi-Service Center (965-6390) and a kosher nutrition site at Congregation Beth El-Atereth Israel (244-7233) for persons 60 and older.

Meals are served at noon. Reservations for lunch should be made at least 24 hours in advance by calling the desired location. Also, a light Thursday evening supper is provided at the Newton Senior Center.

There is no charge for meals but a $1 donation is requested. Transportation to the nutrition sites is provided by Centre Transportation, Inc. Reservations for transportation are required and can be made by calling 969-1418.

All menus are subject to change. This week's menu is as follows:

Thursday, Aug. 14: Knockwurst, baked beans, tossed salad, rye bread, mustard PC, chilled fruit, salisbury steak/gravy, hot potato salad, water pak fruit.

Friday, Aug. 15: Crispy fish, herbed potato, broccoli blend, cracked wheat, hunters pudding, tarter sauce PC, Lo Sugar custard.

Redesigning cities from the ground up

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

CAMBRIDGE — The brightly-colored maps, charts and diagrams on the walls of this second-floor office, tucked away on a side street from the hustle and bustle of Central Square, speak volumes for what Laurence and Sherrie Cutler have tried to do since graduating from Harvard University in 1966.

"We are urban planners and designers," Sherrie Cutler says. "We have worked with officials all over the world to find better ways of living for urban dwellers."

The phone never stops. People from all over the globe call the Cutlers, who dart from one part of the office to the other. The phone, however, is no substitute for direct contact so this day in the office is a happy respite from winging from one country to another.

The times had a lot to do with their ambition, both Cutlers say. Graduates of the turbulent 60s, the Cutlers, like so many other young people of that time, wanted to "change the world."

"With all the things that happened during the 60s," Laurence says, "we were interested in liberal ideas. One of those ideas was low-income housing."

Laurence met his wife-to-be in a Harvard architecture class ("She was the only girl in class and I like girls," he says). And following graduation the two teamed up to form Ecodesign — the architectural and planning business they still run.

One of their first assignments was to work on the federal Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) "In City" program.

Designed to generate more housing for the nation's low-income families, the "In City" project looked at housing problems in 22 American cities.

To offset what they saw as a ineffective means of producing housing, the Cutlers recommended production of low-cost, easily transportable housing units that could be mass produced.

"Nobody was producing enough units on-site," Sherrie says. "The government was not utilizing industrialized housing technology that could produce these types of units, so we recommended mass-produced building-block types of units that could be built anywhere."

Like so many noble ideas of the 60s, however, the Cutlers' vision of mass-produced housing went the way of the peace symbol.

"Those were the days when people cared about housing for the elderly and poor in this country," she says. "You don't hear too much about that now."

The Cutlers were not discouraged. A few years later, spurred by poor job prospects for architects in this country, they went to Nigeria to design a master plan for housing.

Using population figures, demographics and other information, they and a Nigerian partner developed master plans to rebuild seven Nigerian cities.

"Basically, the master plans redesigned the cities from the ground up," she says. "We redesigned their waste systems, transportation systems, school systems as well as housing.

"One of the real problems," she adds, "is that when we started in 1973 it was during the oil boom. People were leaving the farms and coming to the city and we needed to find ways to make that transition a smooth one. Things got even worse when the oil boom subsided, because now there were no oil-related jobs and the farms were even in worse shape due to neglect."

Aside from redesigning its cities, Ecodesign "established and managed the entire U.S. $2 billion Nigerian Army Barracks program, from inception to completion of 14 sites."

The Cutlers, who lived in Newton Corner during the years they helped redesign Nigeria, still maintain an office in Enugu. During the interview, a woman from that office called to ask a few questions. Despite the distance, the Cutlers maintain their ties.

Not all their jobs are as altruistic. The Cutlers were the principal architectural consultants to Bally's Park Place Casino in Atlantic City during that operation's recent redesign.

"That was so decadent," both Cutlers say. "We don't even like Atlantic City, but business is business and this is still America."

In addition, they have won national awards for urban designs in Denver and Portland, Ore. They have designed housing for Honduras and irrigation for Iran.

From Norway to Algeria and Chile to Nigeria, the Cutlers have been in the business of changing the way things operate.

Making cities more hospitable for those who live there, they say, is what their business is really all about. They have written a number of textbooks on the subject, used by urban planners and design professionals world-wide.

"This is our background," Laurence says. "We have been in the business of creating low-income housing for years. One of the books we wrote included a suggestion that cities make things easier for the lay person to understand the process of development."

It's Summertime

Relationships

"The Single Persons Answer"

This page is the perfect place for the unmarried, widowed, divorced or separated to meet that "special someone." It's a way to take charge of your own life in a dignified, confidential manner. Best of all, it will be someone who lives fairly close to you.

THE SINGLES ADVISOR

RAYMOND J. CABOT, LCSW

Meeting suitable men difficult after divorce

Dear Ray,

Since I became divorced two years ago (after 15 years of marriage), I've tried several ways of meeting suitable men. I joined a singles group, had friends introduce me to men and I even ran a personal ad. Although I've met some nice men, I have not met anyone with whom I wanted to develop a serious relationship. I've been wondering if there is a best way of meeting eligible men. What do you suggest..

E.B., Needham

Dear E.B.,

This can be like trying to answer the questions of "What's the best way to get to Boston.." or "Where's the best place to visit once I get there.." It would depend upon where you're coming from and what your individual interests might be.

It seems as though you have made a good start. Singles, like anyone else, have varying goals. Some are just looking to casually date or make friends while others are seeking serious relationships or marriage. Then there are those who have no interest in socializing at all.

Generally, singles groups are a major way of meeting a variety of singles. There are many in the area and from time to time you will see some advertising on this page.

Dating services are another way of meeting a suitable partner. They do vary in quality, however as do their fees. Some charge as much as $1,000 while others are considerably less. As a consumer, you would be well advised to ask direct questions about the number of members and guarantees offered. The more members the better chance of suitable referrals.

Personal ads provide a discreet, inexpensive way of reaching many singles quickly. You then have the opportunity of "interviewing" people by phone before ou agree to meet or decide not to meet. It is often easier to ask someone direct questions on the phone than it is face to face. This page provides the option of either placing an ad yourself or responding to one.

Singles dances are a popular way of meeting. Many are independently run while others are a function of singles groups.

Dating bars tend to cater to a younger crowd. And, usually the music is so loud that it is impossible to carry on any kind of a meaningful conversation.

Another way of meeting singles is through the indirect approach. this consists of participation in activities or pastimes of interest to you. In taking classes, going to the theatre, museums or whatever, you may meet another single with whom you hit it off. At least you'll share one activity in common and possible many more.

The bottom line is to try a variety of ways. Whatever works best for you is the best way.

Do you have a question about dating and relating or learning to function as a single adult.. Send it to the Singles Advisor co°Transcript Newspapers, 18 Pine St., P.O. Box 69, Waltham, MA 02154.

Are you divorced or divorcing.. The divorce booklet, "Divorce and After: learning to function as a single adult" is available for $4. Make check or money order payable to RELATIONSHIPS and mail to Relationships Agency, P.O. Box 434, Lincoln, MA 01773.

$750,000 in fines anticipated

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — City officials, with the recent passage of the step-fine parking ordinance, expect to collect $750,000 annually from parking scofflaws, according to Chief Administrative Officer Richard Kelliher.

The ordinance, which will tack on a $5 surcharge for tickets not paid within 21 days, will go into effect when new computer-compatible parking tickets appear on windshields by the end of next month, Kelliher says.

The tickets will be part of the city's beefed-up fight against parking violators made possible by the step-fine ordinance and the hiring of Datacom Inc. to collect and process the fines.

City and Datacom officials met in City Hall last week to iron out the details of a contract to collect and process the estimated 170,000 tickets issued here annually.

Kelliher says the tickets will streamline the process because they will be scanned by computer, reducing error and increasing efficiency.

"The tickets will be modified to include notices of non-payment," Kelliher says. "They will be optically scanned and payment will be made to lockboxes at the Newton Post Office."

One person elated by hiring an outside agency to collect the fines is Richard Walsh, who used to be the parking clerk. Walsh says he is "ecstatic" that he will no longer receive calls from angry motorists upset with parking tickets.

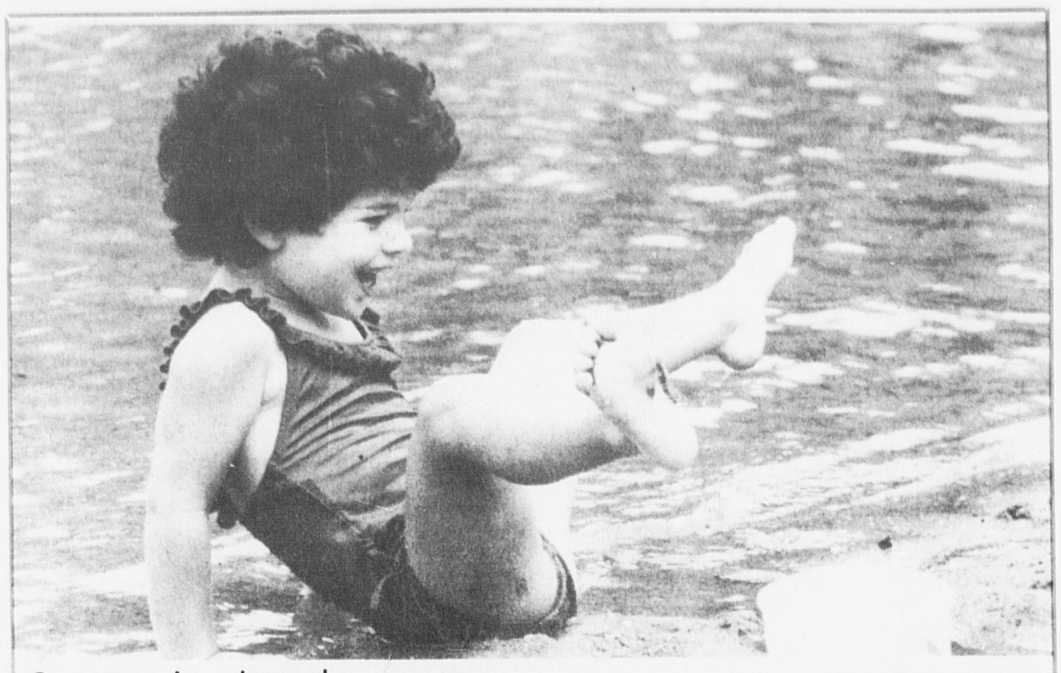

"It was a real pain," Walsh, director of data processing, says of handling the parking clerk's job since 1981. "Most of what I had to deal with were the complaints of people. This is the greatest thing to happen to me."

While the job "was interesting for a year," Walsh says listening to people complain about parking tickets "got old quick."

"It was a study in human nature," he says. "It was interesting for a year, but it has been too many years."

City Treasurer Theodore Scafidi will now handle the parking clerk's duties. According to Walsh, that, combined with hiring an outside agency to collect and process fines, will greatly reduce the strain on the city's

What makes a 'family'?

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Everybody used to know what the word meant. A 'family' consisted of Ma, Pa and maybe a couple of kids. It was as basic as apple pie.

But questions over who has the right to live in family zones and recent court decisions have complicated the once simple term.

The Zoning Amendment Committee (ZAC) may ask the Law Department to cut through the legal fog and define 'family' for a proposed revision of Newton's zoning ordinances.

ZAC Chairman Rodney Barker said he was hoping the state's Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) would define 'family' when deciding the appeal of Leon and Shirley Jaffe.

The city charged the Jaffes converted their 58 Winthrop St. house into a two-family dwelling. The Jaffes denied the charge and argued the city was prosecuting them for renting the premises to single, unrelated tenants.

The SJC upheld a Middlesex Superior Court decision against the Jaffes, but did so strictly on the structure and use of the building. The state's highest court did not offer any insight into what makes up a family.

"I was disappointed," said Barker. "I was hoping the courts would review all cases and statutes and would have come out with their opinion."

The ZAC chairman said he expects to ask Assistant City Solicitor Ouida Young to draft a definition of family to be presented to the committee as soon as possible.

The ZAC was formed to study and make recommendations on the Zoning Review Committee's (ZRC) proposed revision of the city's zoning ordinances. The ZAC will eventually bring the results of its deliberations to the full Board of Aldermen, which must approve any zoning changes.

Told the committee and the Law Department might try to define family, ZRC member Mary Sivak said, "First of all, I wish a lot of good luck to them."

Sivak said the problem would be a little easier to solve if people simply accepted that groups of persons not related by blood or marriage live together. The courts have not held that such a living arrangement is illegal.

Some think unmarried men and women living together "is against the laws of God," she said.

But people have the right to decide such moral questions on their own. "I don't think I can impose my moral standard on anybody else," Sivak said. "As long as no one is hurting me or my children or my freedom, my right to make a decision ends at the end of my nose."

Sivak said the ZAC could make the difficult task easier by retaining the simple, traditional definition of family and then coining a new word for groups not tied by blood or marriage.

Such groups could be allowed to live in family zones if their numbers do not exceed the average size of the traditional family, she said. The city can determine that number by U.S. census statistics.

Young said this is possible, but it raises at least one difficult question. If the city were to limit groups of unrelated people to six in family zones, for example, would it be implying that a traditional family with eight children violates single-family zoning?

Officials shocked

Abandoned Bigelow is uninsured

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON CORNER — One of the city's most valuable pieces of property — Bigelow Junior High School — has been technically uninsured since the School Department declared the building vacant and officially turned it over to the city last Friday, according to city Comptroller Lawrence Marino.

Several city officials, who until Monday afternoon were unaware the building lost its insurance coverage, said the situation is disturbing and they blame the Building Department for not adequately planning and protecting city surplus property.

"It's the Building Department's job to protect city assets and I will be very disturbed if they were negligent in informing us of the situation," Alderman Paul Coletti said.

"Six months ago we told them to ask the Executive Department for funds to cover the cost of extra security and whatever insurance is required to protect the property until it's leased. This is all news to me. Somebody better have some answers. Somebody better be able to explain how this could have happened."

> 'The mayor just better hope nothing happens to any municipal buildings. If disaster strikes, the city will be up a creek.'

Warren wide open

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

WEST NEWTON — School has been out for four years at the Warren Junior High School, but if you were to drive by there some nights, you wouldn't know it.

The building has been vacant since 1982 when it was closed because of the city's declining student population. But last week the Warren was glowing like a shopping mall on opening night. An upper floor window was wide open.

Frank Sostilio, a retired Newton firefighter and a Gilbert Street resident, said lights have been on day and night there for most of the past two weeks. He sees them when he walks his dog between 4 and 5 a.m.

Vandals — most likely teenagers — are probably getting into the building and turning on the lights, he said. City officials are wasting the taxpayers' money by not doing something about it, he said.

"A lot of people are saying, 'Gee, what a waste,'" Sostilio said. "Here they are, blowing my money. It's throwing it away. You wouldn't do it at home."

NTA wants tax cut

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A local taxpayers association is trying to recreate the astounding statewide triumph of Proposition 2½ six years ago.

The Newton Taxpayers Association (NTA) has filed a petition demanding the city reduce its fiscal 1989 property taxes by $2.5 million. Joseph Alexander, NTA executive secretary, estimated the proposal would cut the average homeowner's local taxes by $120.

If City Solicitor Daniel Funk rules the petition is legal and valid, the NTA may be able to force its request onto next year's ballot.

But the NTA faces a road just as tortuous as that traveled by the Citizens for Limited Taxation (CLT) in 1980 when it succeeded in bringing Proposition 2½ to a statewide voter test.

First, the NTA must collect the signatures of 4,859 registered voters to bring the proposal to the Board of Aldermen, according to Alan W. Licarie, executive secretary of the city's Election Commission.

That figure is 10 percent of Newton's voters registered for the last election, he said. The NTA must reach this goal in six months.

Should this effort succeed, aldermen will have 30 days to react. "If they do nothing or if they reject it or if they modify it — which is deemed a rejection — the petitioners have 45 days to get another 5 percent," Licarie said.

Should they collect the additional 2,430 valid signatures, the NTA would submit the proposal once again to aldermen for placement on the 1987 ballot.

A successful NTA drive would give the city its first valid initiative petition, said Licarie, executive secretary for the last 20 years.

In 1980 CLT began its own statewide petition drive by collecting the signatures of 10 percent of the commonwealth's registered voters. When the state Legislature said 'no' to Proposition 2½, the organization gathered another 5 percent to force the issue to the ballot.

Continuum has been discontinued

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

The hallways are silent. The offices and classrooms are vacant.

Continuum, a nonprofit organization originally dedicated to easing women's re-entry into the workforce, is history.

The organization suspended operations as of July 31.

"It appears to be an end of an era," said co-founder Wynne Miller. "We accomplished our mission."

Continuum, which opened shop in 1974 — even before the terms "displaced homemaker" and "job re-entry" were coined — was one of six programs in the United States demonstrating continued success in assisting women to enter the employment market, change careers or seek new starts.

Over the past several years, however, Continuum has also been serving male mid-career changers and recent college graduates.

> 'It appears to be an end of an era. We accomplished our mission.'
>
> Wynne Miller.

"These people came to us," Miller said. And "We just met their needs."

Unfortunately, "That made our program seem to be all things to all people," she said.

The organization — which offered a 22-week program including career counseling, support groups, academic classes, and two internships — did not attract enough clients to support itself with the $2,975 per semester tuition.

Miller felt charging the $4,000 rate needed to keep the organization afloat would price Continuum out of the market.

Faced with such budgetary dilemmas, Continuum closed its doors. The time came "to realize that the organization must move on," Miller said. Continuum will hold its farewell party on September 9 to celebrate its graduates, sponsors and supporters.

Continuum's counselors will be opening an office of their own in Newton, called Career Counseling Associates.

Academic pressure no good for preschoolers

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Most of the city's day care and pre-kindergarten programs avoid stressing academics to preschool-aged children, a practice they say can cause developmental problems in later years.

Havi Stander, director of childcare at the Newton Community Service Center, acknowledges that preschoolers can be taught how to read. The question, she says, is whether it is proper.

"There is this unnatural push toward achievement and I think it stems mostly from all the media hype," Stander says. "The thrust now is to have your child learn everything faster. What children at that age really need is time to explore."

New research conducted by a Michigan-based educational foundation indicates children placed in intensive, highly structured, skill-oriented preschool programs have more social problems in their teen-age years.

Stander says children need more time to discover their potential through playing and socializing with other children their age. The most important skills a preschooler can learn, she adds, are socialization and self-expression.

"I think a lot of children may have difficulty reading in their later years if they are pushed at a young age because they do not have confidence in a social setting," Stander says. "Many parents do come to us and ask how much their child will learn academically and we try to inform them of the importance of giving a child time. We try to explain to them that achievement is not necessarily measured by reading skills and academics."

Judy Madalia, a consultant to day-care and nursery centers in the city, says most preschool programs in Newton do not encourage "formalized or structured reading." Instead, they attempt to prepare the child for the transition to kindergarten where that academic learning will take place.

"I can honestly say that 99 percent of the time it is the parents, not the preschools that push children before they are ready," Madalia says. "Mostly it comes from achievement-oriented families who measure success by academic prowess. I think it also has to do with our high-tech, competitive world."

Book publishers expect that in four years 19 million preschoolers will be reading. There are prestigious preschools in the nation that cost up to $5,000 a year — including the Better Baby Institute in Philadelphia where parents pay $490 a week to learn how to use flashcards to teach their babies.

Stander says some parents think these programs could make or break their child for life.

"This whole thrust is really a marketing push from the publishing world," she says. "It's a big marketing ploy to make parents feel their children are inadequate in this dog-eat-dog world. Did Albert Einstein's mother need flashcards? I don't think so."

Not everyone agrees that structured learning at the preschool level could be detrimental to children in their adolescent years. Child psychiatrist Mancosa Santiago of the Newton Guidance Clinic says children need more stimulation and exposure.

"I think the overall effect is positive," Santiago says. "The structured learning prepares them more for when they enter grammar school. Often when children are not stimulated enough, boredom results and that's when they get into trouble."

Some argue that pushing children to learn sets them up for unnecessary failure. Santiago disagrees.

"Even if a child doesn't succeed academically when exposed to reading at a young age, I think in their later years they will cope much better in a school setting," she says.

At Montessori Educare on Wheeler Street, some 6-year-old children are doing research work using encyclopedias and dictionaries. But according to the school director Phezora Maden, most lessons are self-taught — not pushed by teachers or parents. The school accepts children from 3 months to 12 years.

Elaborating on a luncheonette

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Newton North High School culinary students cook zesty quiche, beef stroganoff, assorted exotic soups and other tantalizing gourmet specialties that feed more than 150 faculty members and school visitors every day.

The program has grown so much in popularity among the student body that construction is underway to expand and develop a more elaborate facility, according to Dan Malia, director of technical vocational education.

What started as a small luncheonette eight years ago has developed into fine dining which could probably rival most local restaurants. Originally, the culinary program was developed for special needs students, but now more than 178 students spend part of their school day preparing goodies for the faculty's willing consumption.

The culinary facility, the Tigerloft, on the third floor of the school, is moving to the fourth floor, which affords more than twice the space, Malia said. Renovation completion is expected in November.

"This year we're adding baking to the program and this extra space will come in real handy. The students will have a separate area in the kitchen strictly for baking so everything can go on simultaneously," he said.

The Board of Alderman appropriated a total of $191,500 for the renovation. Last year the board alotted $162,000 for the project and last month it added an additional $29,500 to complete it, according to City Clerk Edward English.

Culinary equipment was estimated to cost $100,000 over and above the construction cost, but Malia said the kitchen furnishings from Bigelow Junior High School will be used in the Tigerloft. The School Committee recently voted to close Bigelow.

"Our costs were cut tremendously and our equipment purchases will be minimal because of the stove ranges and refrigerators being transferred from Bigelow," Malia said. "All the apparatus is in mint condition too."

The Newton Schools Foundation also received a $4,000 equipment donation from Oscars, a Newton Corner restaurant. The foundation is forwarding Oscars' gifts — two fryolators, a freezer-refrigerator unit and a grill — to the Tigerloft.

"We're in the process of renovating our restaurant and this equipment will not suit the needs of our new menu," Oscars Managing Partner Barry Berlin said.

"We heard the high school had a culinary program and figured we would give it to them since all the equipment is in good condition. We just no longer have use for it."

Stop-work order may be lifted at Rte. 9 explosion site

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — City officials will meet with Beaver Construction and its geologist late this week to determine if a stop-work order issued after a July 15 blasting accident at the company's Route 9 site should be completely lifted.

According to Asst. City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce, who is coordinating the city's investigation into the accident, Building Commissioner James Cameron and Fire Chief Edward Reilly are now reviewing a report from Beaver geological consultant Rick Simon.

That report, he says, places blame for the accident on a fissure in the rock formations which skewed the normal blasting pattern and sent rocks and other debris flying through the air.

After reviewing the report, department heads will quiz Beaver officials to determine if they should be allowed to continue construction of the eight-story retail complex. Blasting, however, will not continue until after Reilly reviews a report of the state Fire Marshal's investigation.

Reilly says he expects a copy of that report next week.

Last week, Cameron partially lifted the stop-work order, permitting Beaver to perform safety and maintenance operations.

Police chief supports mutual aid drug fight

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A mutual aid plan among four area communities could allow police to follow the trail of drug dealers throughout Middlesex County, Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn said.

The chief was commenting on a proposal to have Waltham, Newton, Watertown and Weston cooperate on drug investigations.

Watertown officials last week voted to allow police to negotiate a mutual aid agreement among the four communities.

The three other communities have yet to formalize the agreement with Watertown, but Quinn said the police chiefs and Middlesex County Assistant District Attorney Peter Bella have held discussions the last few months to put the plan together.

If the communities join forces, the county sheriff may deputize designated officers from each to conduct investigations and make arrests anywhere in Middlesex County, Quinn said.

The plan is needed, in part, because drug peddlers often recognize local police, tipping off an investigation. "They can smell a cop," Quinn said.

Each department would be able to call undercover police from the other communities when it gets a lead on illegal drug trafficking.

"You can send 'strange' people to develop your case," Quinn said. "In certain cases, you may need a black officer, a Spanish-speaking officer or a woman."

And police in one community would have the power of arrest in another. "You could make the bust, but you'd still have to call the Watertown police," Quinn said as an example.

Assistant Clerk recovering in hospital

NEWTON — Assistant City Clerk Grace Lennon, who was rushed to the hospital last weekend, is out of intensive care and is listed in fair condition at Leonard Morse Hospital in Natick.

Lennon feared she was having a heart attack Sunday night, but doctors now suspect she is suffering from angina — severe constricting chest pains usually caused by coronary disease.

Tests will be conducted soon to determine what the actual cause of her chest pains were.

She spent three days in intensive care before being transferred to a hospital room on Wednesday. Contacted by phone earlier this week, Lennon said, "I feel better. I'm very exhausted for one thing. The pain was so violent. I've never had anything like this."

It is possible she could be released from the hospital next week, according to Lennon. "When will I be back to work? It all depends," she said.

Lennon, 57, will reach her 18-year milestone as a city employee on Tuesday.

Centre parking lot rehabilitation delayed

NEWTON — The rehabilitation of two rundown Newton Centre parking lots will be delayed until next summer because the sole bid was too high and the contractor was unable to do the job in time, according to Department of Public Works (DPW) officials.

The city had estimated it would cost $220,000 to upgrade the adjacent Pelham Street and Pleasant Street parking lots. But only one contractor bid for the job and his offer exceeded that figure by $60,000.

"The bid came in high," DPW Commissioner James L. Hickey said recently. "Moreover, the contractor said he would be unable to commence work until September."

The city wanted the reconstruction done in the summer when traffic and parking demands in Newton Centre are somewhat less than in fall, Hickey said. That village is one of the most traffic congested in the city and has a severe shortage of parking spaces.

The rehabilitation of the lots would put roughly 160 parking spaces out of commission. In the fall, back-to-school shopping and the holiday parking demand would make that loss too much of an inconvenience, Hickey said.

The project probably will be bid again in late January and — if the price and timing are right — construction will begin next summer, Hickey said.

Hickey and some Newton Centre residents have been working on the reconstruction of the Pelham/Pleasant lots for the past 18 months. The plan was to resurface the cracked asphalt and replace several dumpsters now scattered at its edge with a single one.

The commissioner was hoping building owners and merchants would agree to clean the graffiti from the rear of their stores, which border the lot. In addition, he wanted them to install more attractive signs.

Safety also was a feature of the proposed construction. The city had planned to close off Beacon Place to delivery trucks. A driver turning onto the narrow roadway from Centre Street might not be able to see a pedestrian walking in enough time. The project would have made Beacon Place a pedestrian way.

Once the renovation was complete, delivery trucks would have been able to use the parking lots to get to the rear of stores.

Phone line set up for drug information

NEWTON - The Police Department Drug Investigation Unit (DIU) has installed a special confidential telephone line so the public can inform detectives of any information they might have concerning drug dealings in the city.

"Dial-a-Tip" is predominantly concerned with drug-related information, but Chief William F. Quinn said it can be used for any crime-related information citizens have.

A 24-hour answering machine will take messages. Callers can either leave their names on the machine or leave an anonymous tip, he said. All calls will be confidential.

Locals will watch over changes at HoJos

NEWTON — It is too early to determine the extent of interior and exterior changes to the Howard Johnson's Motor Inn over the Massachusetts Turnpike, according to a spokesman from the company that will buy the hotel.

But one alderman says he will closely watch any proposed changes.

"I will monitor the changes closely," Alderman Ronald Marini says. "I hope they won't try to do something that is drastically different from the operation that is there now."

Marini says so far Newton Corner neighbors have no major complaints with Howard Johnson's. But, because the area is densely populated and heavily trafficked, he says he will step in if the Flatley development company has any plans to expand over the turnpike.

"I will be interested and supportive if there are no major changes," he said. "But we don't need any development over the pike. We have enough problems with traffic and density and we do not need anymore expansion."

Flatley spokesman Richard Carlson says it is too early to be specific.

"We have no specific plans at this point for each individual hotel," Carlson says. "We are looking to invest between $5 and $6 million overall in the next two years, but I really can't talk about the specific changes planned for the Newton hotel."

Last week, Flatley purchased the Newton Howard Johnson's and five other hotels from the Dunfey Corp. Flatley, which owns the castle-like Sheraton Tara in Framingham, will change the appearance of the Newton hotel, but Carlson would not say how much or when.

School administrator resigns position

NEWTON — The Newton Public Schools will bid farewell to Director of Secondary Education Betty Quinn, who has accepted a position in another school system that she said offers her "new opportunities."

Quinn, who has served for seven years, was approached last month by the Wilton Public School in Connecticut for a position as administrator for personnel and general administration. The job will mean expanded responsibilities for budget, negotiations and transportation.

Wilton is a town of 16,000 located 50 miles northeast of New York City. It has five schools with an enrollment of 3,125 — about one-third that of Newton.

This position, she said, is one of two assistants to the superintendent.

"This move will be an asset to my career and I hope my qualifications will be an asset to Wilton," Quinn said. "The decision was a difficult one and I went on vacation a few days to make sure I was thinking clearly."

Quinn served as principal of Bigelow Junior High School for four years and director of secondary education for three years. Her recollection of those years are positive and she speaks of them with fondness and pride.

The school system, she said, weathered the constrictions of Proposition 2½ and budgetary and enrollment declines with "creative flair."

"The faculty and administration maintained outstanding programs in the face of what was predicted to be the death of public education," she said. "The community, students and faculty have also adjusted very well to school closings. It is a real tribute to Newton as other communities did not fare so well."

Something's fishy about city's water

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

NEWTON— Water, water everywhere and not a drop to drink.

Some Newton residents can empathize with the mariner who gave this plaintive cry as he found himself marooned in a sea of non-potable water.

Although their situation is not as extreme as the stranded sailor's, these Newton residents are complaining about fishy smelling and tasting water. Some are reluctant to brush their teeth or take showers, let alone drink their tap water.

The fishy smell is caused by algae in the Wachusett Resevoir, according to Judy Curby, business manager of the Newton Water Sewer Department. Periodically throughout the summer, the algae begin to proliferate, causing the odor. The algae growth, says Curby, has occurred every summer for "several" years.

"When we get complaints, we test the water for bacteria and hazardous materials," she says. "There hasn't been any safety problem."

"It's a natural occurence," explains Warren Zepp, senior sanitary engineer at the Massachusetts Water Resource Association (MWRA). "The water is basically alive. There are fish and all sorts of microscopic organisms.

"At certain times these organisms proliferate and cause an odor. It's hard to pinpoint what sets off the growth — it could be temperature changes or an input of vitamins."

The MWRA treats algae growth with copper sulfate, which is "extremely toxic for algae and non-toxic for people," according to Zepp. Using a boat, several tons of copper sulfate, a truck haul, and three to five men, the MWRA is able to treat about a week's worth of water at once.

When water is purified by the copper sulfate method, it is distributed to local water departments and consumers. Some customers are at the end of the chain, and thus they may not receive the purified water for several weeks.

"Some people will have the smelly water and some will have the not-so-smelly water," says Zepp. "It is harmless, although perhaps quite unpleasant," he adds.

Copper sulfate treatment cannot be used preventatively, nor is it permanent. There are several methods to keep reservoir water algae-free, but, says Zepp, they involve "mega-bucks."

One possibility is constructing a plant to filter all water going through the system. However, with 300 million gallons a day being delivered from the resevoir, such a plant would be expensive to construct and maintain.

An alternative to the filtering idea is building an aqueduct from the Quabbin resevoir, which does not usually have algae problems. However, says Zepp, the aqueduct would have to be at least 13 feet in diameter, and it would be routed through bedrock. Constructing this bypass would be a "major, major project," he says.

Whenever the city's Water/Sewer Department gets complaints about the water, the MWRA will check the resevoir and treat it with copper sulfate if necessary. But, says Zepp, "If we don't notice the problems ourselves, we won't treat them. We don't want to add things to the water if we don't have to."

Newton residents cannot travel to neighboring towns to avoid fishy-smelling water; Brookline, too, has an algae-bloom problem. And even if the odor disappears this fall, it will probably return.

"It will gradually come back, then gradually go away again, then gradually come back," says Zepp. "You just have to let nature take its course."

Committee calls for revisions to zoning

NEWTON — The aldermanic Zoning Amendment Committee (ZAC) is revising the way many Newton residents will be able to use their homes.

In an effort to increase the number of housing units in the city while maintaining the residential atmosphere, ZAC is recommending changes to the city's zoning ordinances that would allow construction of accessory apartments within certain homes.

In addition, the committee is also tightening up ordinances regulating businesses run out of the home. Both revisions are aimed at controlling the density and other growth pressures on residential neighborhoods.

The ZAC met last week to finalize their recommendations on the Home Office and Accessory Apartment ordinances, which they will eventually present to the Board of Aldermen. The ZAC picked up where the ad-hoc Zoning Review Committee left off in the effort to rework the city's zoning ordinances. The ZRC was made up of aldermen, developers and private citizens who met for more than six months to revise the ordinances. They handed the baton to the ZAC, an aldermanic committee that is doing the legislative legwork to enact those changes.

According to Assistant City Solicitor Ouida Young, who is representing the Law Department during the committee's sessions, the ZAC's Accessory Apartment ordinance would specify the conditions homeowners must meet before converting interior space to accessory apartments.

Young says only owner-occupied, single family homes can qualify to petition the board for a special permit that would allow the conversion. The homes must have been built before 1946 and they must contain at least 3,100 square feet of inhabitable floor space.

If approved by the board, accessory apartments cannot contain more than 30 percent of that inhabitable floor space and the unit must be occupied by someone other than the owner.

In addition, Young says accessory apartments will have to meet the city's parking restrictions.

Leaving parenting to our teachers

As the summer draws to a close, "Back to School" displays appear in local stores, kids begin to feel this vague sense of dread gnawing away at their summertime fun and parents, mostly mothers, begin to look forward to having the house to themselves again for much of the day. They watch the kids head out for their first day of school in new clothes, toting new lunchboxes, bookbags or backpacks, they close the door and they breathe a long sigh of relief.

The relief comes, in effect, from shifting some of the burden of parenting over to schoolteachers. This is understandable, and it has been going on for a long, long time. But the liabilities involved in handing the reins over to schoolteachers and administrators are increasing at an alarming rate.

Whereas parents used to worry about their kids getting into fights, running in front of speeding cars or ripping their school clothes in after school games, the hazards that threaten today's schoolchildren are considerably more complex. They demand more study, more understanding; and a "Don't-you-dare-do-that" will do little in the way of avoidance.

Research by the National Education Association has pinpointed some of the most threatening situations with which today's students may be confronted. Drug and alcohol abuse, teen pregnancy, eating disorders, child abuse and teen depression and suicide are among the perils cited. The NEA's concern is that these problems are among the causes behind a high school dropout rate that now exceeds 30 percent. A million young people a year drop out of school before graduation, according to the report.

The picture the NEA paints of "school days" in the 1980's bears little resemblance the memories that persist among the parents of today's students. For instance:

• About one-fourth of all high school students regularly smoke marijuana and more than two-thirds use alcohol. Eight percent of sixth graders use marijuana.

• If current trends continue, four out of 10 girls who are now 14 will get pregnant in their teens.

• Some 15 percent of young American women will be anorexic during part or all of their teenage years if today's trend remains steady.

• One out of three girls and one out of eight boys under 18 have reported incidents of sexual abuse.

Suicide is still the third most common cause of death among young people 15 to 24 years old, after accidents and homicide, and the second most common cause of death among 15- to 19-year-olds.

There are programs in the Newton schools aimed at finding remedies for the problems besetting today's students. They have been created by professionals and they are being applied with vigor; but they are not enough.

We can not let the "state" take over the role traditionally played by parents. The business of teachers is teaching. Parents are the ones responsible for the value systems of their children, not city employees.

Parenting has gone through some radical changes in recent years. Working parents, single parents, "latchkey" children and "extended" families are shaking the traditions many of us grew up with. We are hard put to find solutions to problems, like those cited by the NEA, that scarcely existed a couple of decades ago.

But it is unfair to the children to assume that they will encounter solutions to these problems in school or that state-sponsored programs will provide them with the means to cope. "Back to School," while it might mean Mom has the house to herself for a couple of hours a day, should not mean that the buck has been passed.

Legislators take a 'recess'

Nice work, if you can get it

By George B. Merry

'Tis a midsummer day, and all through the State House,
Not a lawmaker is stirring, not even a spouse.
Stacks of legislation have been pigeonholed with care

This little ditty describes an all-too-familiar scene at the Massachusetts State House, where most senators and representatives are off on what amounts to an eight-week vacation.

The informal recess, which began July 10, brought to a virtual halt a legislative session already marked by its slow pace.

This has to concern conscientious lawmakers — Republicans and Democrates alike— who take "the people's business" more seriously it seems than some of their colleagues do.

Defenders of the "summer break" argue that the legislature is not really shut down. And technically that may be correct, since both the Senate and House, before beginning their extended leave, agreed to meet briefly twice a week to deal with routine matters.

Usually no more than a handful of lawmakers, one of them presiding, shows up for these sittings, which do little more than satisfy the state constitutional requirement. It specifies that once the lawmaking year has begun, both Senate and House must meet at least a couple times a week until the session's end.

Provision, however, is made for up to four weeks of recess at the legislature's discretion. But for reasons known best to Senate and House leaders, the decision was made, as in the past, not to take advantage of such official time off. Instead, the lawmakers seem to prefer to make it appear that they are on the job, which is hardly the case as far as meaningful activity is concerned.

Before taking off, the legislators hustled along scores of measures, most of them hardly controversial and but a few of significance. Among the nearly 350 laws enacted in the past seven months are the record $9.84 billion state budget for fiscal 1987, a $137.8 million deficiency budget for the year that ended June 30, a curb on medical-malpractice costs, and a measure making it tougher for fathers to dodge child support.

The lawmakers also found time to approve a $4 million-a-year tax break for the commonwealth's two dog race tracks. That money was intended to help improve the quality of the racing. Also, more than 200 more matinee and evening dates were authorized for parimutuel wagering operations.

Meanwhile, most of the year's most important work, including a long-overdue overhaul of the public-employee pension program, a provision for a state tax cap, and reform of the criminal sentence structure, face a uncertain future.

Also languishing is the House-approved wiping out of the income-tax surcharge, retroactive to last January; the proposed state takeover of county jail costs; and stricter drunk-driver penalities.

Obviously some of the still-pending legislation will make it later in the year, but probably not until after the Sept. 16 primary, even though both the Senate and House are supposedly returning, ready to roll up their sleeves, the previous week.

It could be November, after the election, before the senators and representatives accomplish all that much, despite the fact less than a dozen of them appear to face more than token ballot opposition.

The suggestion that lawmakers need time away from Beacon Hill to campaign is often little more than an excuse to stretch out the legislative session. At this point, there is no indication that legislative leaders, especially Senate President William M. Bulger (D) of Boston, intend to end the sitting before mid-December, if then.

Meanwhile, most other state legislatures, including those in New England, have wound up their annual sessions. If others can get their work done in six months, or less, why cannot Massachusetts senators and representatives do it?

Several proposals for a state constitutional deadline for concluding legislative work are up for consideration by Senate and House members when they meet jointly next month.

Their next con-con sitting, as it is called, is Sept. 10. But is is questionable whether the matter will receive serious consideration since such a restriction could tie the hands of lawmakers.

Were the annual sessions confined to half a year, or even a couple months longer, it might be harder for legislators to vote themselves future pay raises from the $30,000-a-year level.

That compensation would seem to be most adequate —perhaps even overly generous— for what amounts to less than a half year of legislative activity, even if spread out over 12 months.

(George B. Merry writes for the Christian Science Monitor)

Tinkering with OML is not needed

Give our legislators a law that is working well to tinker with and they do so with relentless zeal. The Open Meeting Law, protecting the public's right to know what elected officials are doing in the conduct of myriad procedures, is a good example. Over the past two decades, since enactment of OML, it has been effective in opening doors heretofore closed. Most city and town business had been conducted in executive sessions apart from hearings required by statute.

A half dozen amendments have weakened the law without diverting it from its main objective, which is public access to all meetings of boards, committees and commissions. Now comes yet another amendment, already put through both branches, which puts a screen over applicants for municipal positions, one of the more sensitive being that of school superintendent. Some local officials believe the likelihood of media disclosure of the names of those seeking such a position is a factor discouraging qualified candidates. From this thinking came the General Court's revision.

At least a partial justification can be found for this opinion, although some city officials are unsure that there has been adetrimental effect among qualified candidates in their experience.

What the amendment ready for enactment does is to throw a first cut screen over the initial body of candidates for appointment. It permits a first interview screening process without divulging those who have applied. Names of those surviving the first round would then be made public.

The governmental body itself would make the judgment as to whether an open meeting at the outset would be detrimental to any candidate. That's an invitation to secrecy. Moreover, if a candidate is qualified, he or she is reasonably sure to get over the first hurdle and into the open.

Two Newton lawmakers, Reps. David Cohen and Susan Schur, like the doors closed on an initial screening session. Newton School Committee Chairman Gentile likes the open evaluation all the way. Waltham School Committeeman Bob McGurrin sees it as a "useless mechanism." because qualified candidates invariably move into the next round.

We strongly support the positions taken by Gentile and McGurrin. The protection sought in behalf of aspirants is so narrow it has no significance. Any public administrator seeking to move elsewhere who does not have sufficient confidence in his professional competence to risk a job-hunting disclosure ought not to be given such consideration.

Letting the Open Meeting Law do its job without such tinkering would be the thing to do. Any amending action should be shelved.

Invest, not divest, in South Africa

By Loring Swaim

How about some thought-provoking heresies for today? Stand by.

Contrary to conventional wisdom, a surprising number of folks I've talked to lately worry that America's fevered pitch for sanctions against South Africa, far from being helpful, may actually be the weakest possible strategy for change.

How's that for starters?

Congress is steamed up with the fixation that to destroy South Africa's obnoxious apartheid, enlightened nations must "pressure" the racist government into fast-forward reform. The approved instruments are worldwide condemnation, total divestiture, and "tough" economic sanctions.

Sounds logical at face value. Apartheid is, indeed, gross so make them get rid of it — forthwith.

But the sanctions strategy cleverly frames the discussion in terms which obscure more basic issues. One is finding the formula by which European colonial powers can free their African colonies to step into the 20th century without delivering htem into worse colonialism. Another is not being fooled into creating such chaos and turmoil in our outrage that only scavengers can survive.

Instead of imposing economic sanctions on the South Afican government, instead of hounding American companies to pull up stakes and wipe the dust off their feet, why aren't enlightened American investors mobilizing resources to pour into the region? Heresy?

By many accounts, it has been the influence of the 192 American companies (out of 260) daring to do busness in South Africa according to the humanitarian Sullivan principles which has brought about the most effective modification of apartheid to date.

These forward-looking companies operate regularly as working models of power-sharing between blacks and whites. By earning paychecks, by getting educational training, housng support, social services, and trade union representation, their employees experience a measure of desegregation — now.

According to long-time anti-apartheid Pretoria Parliament member Helen Suzman, more than anything blacks there want jobs and a growing economy. Sanctions will dry up both, she pleads.

If these companies retrench, jobs will be lost, misery and frustration will spread, and the stage will be set for violence, bloodshed, discontent and revolution. Militant revolutionaries, bent on "making South Africa ungovernable," are jubilant. They are trained and poised to create, then exploit, just such conditions. They step in and take control in the name of order and never let go,.

Why, then, have we persuaded ourselves these positive economic prototypes of the future should be undermined and drummed out? Why aren't we helping create more such examples thorughout southern Africa, rather than less?

Instead of bemoaning the darkness of apartheid, why doesn't the free world turn on some flood lights?

Why don't American black leaders — Ed Brooke; Arthur Haley; Chicago's Mayor Harold Washington; Atlanta's Andrew Young come to mind— get together and put it to their colleagues by the hundreds to assemble big development dollars to invest long-term in black-owned and black-run factories in southern Africa to build computers, refrigerators, automobiles, housing components, transportation facilities, etc., etc.? These to be located, not in prosperous white South Africa but in the black independent homeland outside where non-whites live with little stake in the future?

Why not ante up for blacks the resources to run their own affairs unbeholden to English and Afrikaner whites and to develop their own economy serving the needs of emerging African nations?

If free private enterprise, democracy and the capitalist system have brough prosperity and improved living conditions in the US and Europe, why can't they do the same in the Third World so eager to modernize? If our economic system is the envy of the world, why are we so ashamed of it? Why are we on such a guilt trip that we retreat from South Africa with our tails between our legs, leaving the field to militant revolutionaries?

Heresy of heresies, do Sens. Kennedy, Kerry & Co., so hepped on sanctions, have their eye on the wrong ball, in effect, shooting us in the foot?

People, I discover, are having serious second thoughts.

A birthday bash in the bleachers

By Harriet Cuthbert

I was celebrating my 29th birthday again (it was at least the 10th time) with a glass of champagne when my teenage son David handed me his present. He was taking us to a Red Sox game to be preceded by fine, fast cuisine at our local Burger King. What a marvelous, thoughtful surprise — a date with David.

It was a beautiful night for a game, and David said he had secured "excellent" seats in the bleachers, having bought them one month ahead of time. So, after eating our burgers as fast as we could, we raced over to Fenway Park in order to be there an hour early so that David could watch the warm-ups. After all, he wanted to get his money's worth. We sat down in the second row on the aisle, and I did agree with him that these were, indeed, excellent seats.

However, the parade had only just begun, and since we arrived with an hour to spare, we, of course, had the chance to view it for that extra hour. At first, I thought it was amusing to watch the endless variety of fans trying to locate their seats.

"What section is this?"

"Where is section 38?"

"Which way do the numbers run?"

"Where's the beef?"

All of these questions and more were addressed to me — innocently sitting in my chair, trying to glance at yesterday's newspaper while awaiting the start of the game.

Finally, it was 7:30 p.m., game time, and what, I naively thought would be the end of the parade. I was wrong. And as I glanced to my left and noticed that except for David and me, our whole row was empty along with the row in front, I knew I was dead wrong about seeing a baseball game.

There were many marvelous and informative T-shirts to read. When I tired of learning everybody's business and country of origin, I began making bets with myself on how many people would spill their beer right at my step and on how close it would come splashing to me. After all, step 2 is a long way from step 24, and with only two beers allowed at each visit to the bar, think how many trips will be made before the seventh inning death knell — last call for beer at the baseball game.

Suddenly, the sound of thundering herds distracted me from my game of splash and crash. At least 30 very large, loud males in assorted shirts, non-shirts, and tatoos appeared and filled those empty seats with their girth and mirth. Now I was convinced that I would neither see nor hear any part of this game. It seemed to be about the third inning, and the Red Sox were doing something right because all the other 34,000 people were cheering wildly. I was wiping beer off my leg. David was looking very angry at having been squeezed between me on the aisle seat and the 300 lb. loudmouth(s) on his left.

To add to our discomfort, whenever these fans came back up the ramp with a beer in each hand, they repeatedly could not locate their seats and they had to stop at the wall exactly in front of us to re-orient themselves. David and I got more infuriated with each stop until finally I approached a very grimy, unshaven, glazed-eye male and asked him to move. He responded, "In a while, lady, when I'm ready." I then answered, "No, NOW!!" He called me a very blasphemous name and when David heard this he screamed at the cretin with every profanity he ever knew and finished with, "That's my mother, you &*#$!"

David received a genuine hero's welcome from the 30 boozing bruisers who were suddenly not so menacing as I had thought. In fact, they told me David was a great kid and I should be very proud to have him as my son.

The eighth inning was approaching. The crowds could no longer buy beer so the parade rested. We had excellent seats for the game. By the way, the Red Sox won. Thanks for the great birthday present, David.

Limit library building costs

To the editor:

The Board of Directors of the Newton Taxpayers' Association has voted to request that an upper limit be placed on the total expenditure for a new main library building, including furnishings, fixtures, and allowance for inflation.

That limit would not exceed $10 million. Within that limit, the total expenditure would also not exceed the total of $4 million plus voluntary contributions and the amount of the proceeds of the sale and/or rental of the city-owned properties known as a Warren Junior High School and the present main library. Contributions, plus the two properties, should yield about $6 million. If less, spend less.

Joseph A. Alexander, Executive Director
Newton Taxpayers, Association

Fire department applauded

Late on the evening of August 7, 1986, our family returned home to find several of the Newton fire trucks in the street in front of our house. They had been called by a neighbor, Mr. Doug Kirshen, who had smelled smoke, alertly checked on the source, which was our kitchen, and then summoned help.

The fire department responded quickly and efficiently, found the source in our kitchen stove, and put it out without causing damage to other parts of the room. Because much of the house was smoky, they opened windows and used their fans to effectively clear the pair before the particles had much chance to coat the walls and other services.

Equally important, they were able to calmly explain circumstances to us and to offer advice on how we could prevent recurrence. Throughout the period in which they carried out their duties, they were polite and professional in every way. They kept a minor incident from becoming a serious loss. They reminded us of the imporatance of keeping our smoke alarms in good working order.

The incident taught us that our Newton firemen are a real asset to the community, and are one more reason why this city is a fine place to live. Until we have a problem they are invisible, and thus are too often taken for granted. We urge our fellow citizens to take more notice and give more recognition to this important service and to the people who make it such a fine organization.

Making it criminal to pay criminals a pension

To the editor:

Taxpayers across the commonwealth have been justifiably expressing outrage over the sizable state pensions awarded to six MBTA workers convicted of stealing hundreds of thousands of dollars from the agency.

Because of a loophole in the law regarding MBTA retirement pensions, the Supreme Court ruled that the convicts are legally entitled to retire and be supported by the state's taxpayers.

In light of this travesty, I have re-filed legislation I have offered unsuccessfully for the past several years that would prevent any elected or appointed state employee convicted of a crime while on the job from receiving retirement benefits.

Hopefully, the legislature will now realize the importance of this legislation and enact it before another mammoth injustice occurs. Taxpayers should not be forced to pay the price for a legal loophole that should have been closed years ago.

Court ruling 'unfair' to cops

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A recent U.S. Supreme Court decision that could hold police officers personally liable for wrongful arrests despite their having a warrant issued by a judge or court magistrate is a "scary" prospect and puts an "unreasonable burden" on officers, according to Newton District Court Judge Monte G. Basbas.

As written in the decision, a magistrate or a judge's issuance of a warrant will not necessarily shield an officer from liability if "a well trained officer in his position would have known that his affidavit failed to establish probable cause and that he should not have applied for the warrant."

According to Basbas, the court, based on legal expertise, decides if there is probable cause to issue a warrant and it is the officers job to execute the warrants as ordered by the courts.

"This decision is basically asking police officers to be lawyers as well," Basbas said. "It's telling officers to ignore a judge's warrant if they feel it is erroneous. Officers are being asked to second-guess a judge. Now, whose judgment should you trust more on the law, a police officer or a judge who has had a lot of experience? I think it's preposterous that officers can't rely on the court's protection."

Although a judge cannot be held liable for an improper issuance of a warrant, the city police can be sued for damages for obeying it.

Police Chief William F. Quinn was unavailable for comment.

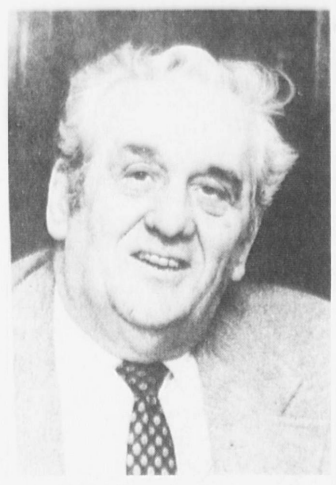

Basbas said the ruling could have a "chilling effect" on police officers as this decision could inspire a large number of civil suits against officers. The U.S. Supreme Court majority argues the decision should not hamper officers' ability to perform their duties. Rather, an officer who is aware that "unreasonable decisions will be actionable may be motivated to reflect before submitting a request for a warrant..."

This "reflection" should reduce the number of premature warrant requests by officers, according to the decision.

"This creates one hell of a problem for police officers, who now, under this decision, are putting their necks on the line by serving warrants," Basbas said. "This decision is expecting officers to know what a judge or lawyer has to look at legal books to determine. What is frightening is that an average officers on the beat is not fully aware of the potential pitfalls and implications this decision can have on them."

It is difficult to determine whether the ruling has had a detrimental affect yet in the city, but there will eventually be a "cool down" on the number of warrants served, Basbas said.

"It will always be hard to tell if officers are not pulling in warrant arrests because they can't find the people or if they're just sitting on the warrants out of intimidation," Basbas said. Officers who have a speck of doubt about a warrant request should confer with local district attorneys for advice and guidance on the legal implications to confirm whether there is proabable cause, Basbas said.

Bigelow is uninsured

The School Committee voted last year to close Bigelow because of declining enrollment. In May, they also voted to turn the surplus building over to the city Aug 15. The Board of Aldermen recently voted to retain the building under city ownership in case the School Department needs it in the future.

"Our concern was that in five years the schools may once again need the building if enrollment increases as projected," Coletti said. "We decided we would lease the building for five years.

"Major stipulations are that the people who lease the building cannot make any major changes or rennovations and they will be responsible for all insurance and liability costs during that time," said Coletti. "My understanding, though, was that the city would insure the building until then."

The Fire Department, meanwhile, was ordered to beef up security at Bigelow. A fire watch has been set up to check the building four times every night for vandalism and intruders, Fire Chief Edward Reilly said.

"I was notified six months ago that the building would be vacant on Aug. 15," Reilly said. "There is no fire insurance for vacant buildings so we're making periodic checks on the building."

Mayor Theodore D. Mann said additional security and a fire watch at Bigelow were arranged because of the high deductible on the building — $250,000 — in the city's $35 million blanket insurance policy.

"I don't know that the building is uninsured now," he said. "We were compelled to buy this insurance with a high deductible, and given the circumstance, we recently decided to give the building the best protection possible."

According to Coletti, the fire watch is not adequate protection. He said he wants 24-hour roving security and full time janitors working in the building.

"Our goal at this point is to keep the building as active as possible while it's vacant to keep people out," he said. "The aldermen have been on top of this from the beginning. We adamantly told the Building Department to make sure this ludicrous situation would never come to be."

Repeated attempts to contact Building Commissioner James Cameron were in vain, but Coletti said angrily, "I guarantee you I will have much more success in contacting him. He will return my phone call."

Marino said that until Monday afternoon the property was still on the city's insurance schedule because he had not been notified by the Building Department that it was officially vacated.

He said it is not unusual that the city should terminate insurance coverage on a vacant building because no insurance company would take the risk of including it in a policy. It would cost the city the price of the property to insure it, he added.

Alderman Richard McGrath said questions about the building's insurance will be docketed for discussion at the next Finance Committee meeting.

"This is not an understandable thing. I thought the building was still insured," he said. "The Building Department is doing almost nothing to protect the city's assets. Something, somewhere just doesn't make sense."

Aside from specific questions about Bigelow's insurance status, the city's entire insurance policy has been a controversial issue at recent Finance Committe meetings, McGrath said.

At a meeting in July, Trustee of the Municipal Insurance Fund John P. Nixon, who was recently reappointed by the mayor, told the committee the city is not adequately insured. The city's estimated $200 million worth of property is insured for only $35 million, Nixon said. According to Colleti, the mayor decided to cut the city's $100 million insurance coverage to $35 million this year.

"I'm very concerned that the mayor only renewed the policy for $35 million. It doesn't make any sense," Nixon said Monday.

"As a taxpayer, I'm concerned about it because we're going to be the ones to foot the bill should something happen to any of the city's buildings. In my opinion, the mayor is being penny-wise and pound-foolish."

Nixon said $35 million would barely cover the cost to replace Newton North High School if it was ever destroyed by fire or a storm. He said the lack of insurance coverage for Bigelow is a perfect example of the city's "mismanagement."

"As far as I'm concerned, the whole city is going to pot," Nixon said. "The mayor just better hope nothing happens to any municipal buildings. If disaster strikes, the city will be up a creek."

Lights on in vacant Warren

Alderman Richard McGrath, whose home is in the shadow of the Warren, said the number of lights turned on increases almost every night.

"There's a phantom energy waster," McGrath said. "I don't know who's to blame."

"Any time the meter is running on senseless expenditures, I worry," he added. "I have a hard time going to sleep. I see the meter ticking away."

Residents have been calling him to complain. "They say, 'Look at it, McGrath. Shut the lights out,'" he said.

But the responsibility for doing that rests with the Building Department, the Ward Four alderman said.

Building Commissioner James Cameron said he has been sending his men to turn off the lights whenever there are complaints. The department will put padlocks on the electrical panels to keep the alleged pranksters out, he said.

"We'll take the next step and provide more security," he said.

His workers have been shutting off some of the electrical circuits, but a minimal amount of power must be kept for smoke detectors, Cameron said.

The long-empty building would not be Cameron's problem if aldermen had moved more quickly to sell or lease it, some city officials have said.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann has said vacant, surplus buildings attract vandalism and are a fire risk. Any damage would lower the value of the Warren, whose sale Mann hopes will help finance a new main library.

But Warren neighbors want the building to be the home of the city's new main library. They've also questioned whether ground water at Mann's preferred site — a parcel across from City Hall — would make library construction there too expensive.

After soil tests dispelled this concern, the Aldermanic Real Property Reuse Committee, which has deliberated the issue since last spring, last month voted terms under which the Warren could be sold.

The committee recommended the building be sold for no less than $2 million and that no more than 75 housing units be developed there.

Last week, McGrath convinced the full board to hold off final approval of the building's sale until it is sure construction will not encroach on surrounding park lands and athletic fields.

The Warren is the largest piece of surplus property the city owns. It sits on a major roadway — Washington Street — in the middle of a residential area. The former school's athletic fields are among the most popular in the city.

Push for $2.5 million tax cut

Alexander acknowledged the NTA did not arrive at the $2.5 million figure by accident. "Two-and-a-half does strike a familiar chord," he said.

The proposal actually would reduce the local tax burden by around twice that amount, since it would prevent the city from increasing property taxes the usual 2.5 percent.

The combined effect of prohibiting the annual tax hike and imposing the multi-million dollar cut would produce an estimated 6 percent savings for most homeowners, he said.

The justification for all this tax slashing is the city's $9.4 million surplus, Alexander said.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann has said the surplus is deceiving since it includes uncollected revenues. And what remains — free cash — is required to repair deteriorating municipal facilities, pay for the city's liability insurance account and set up a $1 million emergency fund, he said.

"That's not entirely true from our point of view," Alexander said. "They're saying that the surplus is all allocated, but we're not buying it. It's all puff talk.

"If it (the surplus) were twice as much, they'd be saying the same thing," he said. "If it were half as much, they'd get along with it."

Richard Kelliher, the city's chief administrative officer, said he preferred not to join in the surplus debate. "At this stage, I'm not sure what I could add to it," he said.

But Alderman Paul Coletti, chairman of the Finance Committee, denied the city surplus is excessive. Most municipalities reserve between 5 to 10 percent of their total budget as free cash, he said. Newton's $6.2 million free cash is approximately 5 percent of its $115 million fiscal 1987 expense plan.

"I personally don't see the merit of an across-the-board tax cut until we've solved some of the problems we face today," he said.

He recommended NTA members discuss the budget with the Finance Committee rather than hold a signature drive.

Alexander said he would be glad to talk with the Finance Committee and has asked aldermen to vote the association's proposed tax cut, a decision which would make the signature drive unnecessary.

Coletti said he doubts aldermen will do the NTA's work for it. "I don't think this board will arbitrarily make this kind of reduction," he said.

In that case, the NTA will soon begin canvassing neighborhoods, supermarkets, and perhaps even the post office for names.

Licarie cautioned that the NTA will have to collect more than the required signatures, since the Election Commission may find some are invalid.

"You're going to find people who sign more than once. Some people forget," he said. "Some may not be registered voters."

Alexander said the NTA will probably employ around 100 volunteers and collect enough extra names to make up for any the commission may rule invalid.

The NTA proved its ability to rally the public in 1983 when its "STOP" campaign spurred a voter rejection of a Proposition 2½ override, he said. Municipal officials wanted to levy extra taxes to pay for a new library.

Alexander expects the results will be just as good this time. "I feel we have a good cause and we should prevail," he said.

Career change for Continuum

And Miller is opening another chapter in her career in "developing people to their fullest potential." She will be running a workshop called "Money, Work and Personal Purpose" starting September 16 in the Newton area.

The new workshop, Miller said, is for people looking for meaning in their lives — people who really want to make a contribution. She said the Live Aid concert is one indication of a new societal "consciousness" toward benevolence.

"It's a consciousness that didn't exist a few years ago," said Miller. "And I would like to be on the cutting edge of that movement."

In fact, Miller and her partner Rita Schore were on the cutting edge of the movement of women re-entering the work force. The idea for Continuum was originally laid out on a kitchen table soon after Miller found herself with two sons and divorced from her husband, whom she had helped support through medical school.

Over the years, Continuum moved to the third floor of the Newton Country Day School and served over 400 students, of which 90 percent found employment soon after graduation.

In 1978, Miller's partner, Schore, died in an automobile accident, leaving Miller to fend for herself with Continuum.

Yet the program continued to succeed, right up to August of last year when several students and the director of admissions were featured on the Phil Donahue Show.

"We were part of a major force that educated companies toward accepting women and the value of volunteer work history," Miller said.

"In the past dozen years, enormous strides have been made and women are much more sophisticated. The public's consciousness has been raised and inroads have been made."

Although she feels sad about closing Continuum, "A closing is an opening for a new beginning," she said. Indeed, Miller plans to pursue the same path in her new workshop.

"If anything, the mission was and is to help people trust themselves — to learn the value of themselves and other people."

computer system.

"The job is now in the right department because it is a collection process," he says. "Now, when an irate person comes here, he will no longer be looking for me."

In addition, Walsh says hiring Datacom will "dramatically reduce" the strain on the city's computers and increase capacity for other data processing functions like the city census.

Definition of 'family' is sought

"No one is going to throw out a (traditional) family of 10," Young said.

Whatever definition the city adopts must have something to do with zoning and how land is used, Young said.

"In other words, does the standard nuclear family utilize land differently than a group would?" Young said. "If you can't articulate the difference, you have to ask yourself on what rational basis you would defend another definition."

The courts recently have tended to rule that family zones cannot be restricted to blood- or marriage-related groups, she said. Any local definition would have to take this trend into account.

It may be legally possible to restrict single-family zones to groups that function as a single "housekeeping" unit, Young said.

This would include groups of unrelated people who have a common interest and share living arrangements, she said. There also must be some guarantee that their relationship is not temporary.

A convent of nuns or elderly people who live together for companionship and economic need would probably meet this standard, she said.

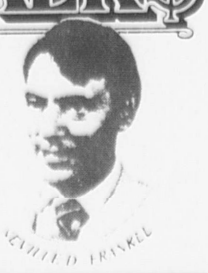

The SJC in the Jaffe case kept its sight focused on zoning issues — building structure and use. Its decision may enable the city to enforce zoning without getting into the issue of what is or is not a family, she said.

"I'm not entirely persuaded our ordinance would be better served by a definition of family," said Young.

Weigh issues before refinancing

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

I am contemplating refinancing my home and am unable to make a true comparison of my current mortgage versus those being offered as replacements. Could you help to untangle the mortgage mess for me?

D.S., Waltham

Dear D.S.:

Some of the issues you need to consider in determining whether or not to refinance are:

- "Upfront costs" that will be incurred.
- Length of time you anticipate remaining in your home.
- Dollar amount you plan to refinance.
- Spread in interest rates between your current mortage and what you can now obtain.

Generally, a good test of whether or not refinancing will be advantageous for you is to determine the time it will take to recoup the costs that are incurred. This period will fluctuate by borrower, depending on the factors listed above.

Refinancing a mortgage generally involves paying closing costs, which include appraisal fees, legal fees and, in most instances, an origination fee. The origination fee, commonly referred to as "points," is based on a percentage of the amount being refinanced and can represent a substantial expense. For example, refinancing a $200,000 mortgage at three points will cost an individual $6,000 in origination fees alone.

Other costs to be considered include potential prepayment penalties, which can be assessed when you have an early pay-off of a loan. Also, an opportunity cost should be recognized, which is equal to the forfeited investment income on the monies that are used to pay for the refinancing.

When you refinance your existing mortgage at a lower interest rate for the same loan period or longer, your monthly payments obviously will decline. However, if the new term is shorter, or you borrow more money when you refinance, your monthly payments could increase. Therefore, you should analyze the potential monthly savings and principal balance changes very carefully.

Example: A homeowner, who is in the 50 percent tax bracket is currently paying $1,700 per month on his $150,000 home mortgage. Of this amount, $1,670 represents deductible interest payments. If he were to refinance the mortgage at an available lower rate, his payments would decrease to $1,360 per monthly ($1,300 would apply to interest). The reduced interest rate would result in an after-tax savings of $2,220. This savings might be invested at eight percent annually.

To refinance, our homeowner must pay $5,750 in closing costs (origination fee $3,000, attorney's fee $1,250, title insurance and other bank fees $1,500). Although the origination fee is deductible, presumably it is taken into account over the life of the loan. Consequently, the amount deductible each year is not significant in relation to the other costs and has not been taken as a deduction in arriving at the after-tax cost of $5,750. Assume that this $5,750, if invested, would have earned eight percent taxfree.

The mere difference in monthly payments is not the "true" dollar savings. Since most homeowners do itemize, the effect of reduced interest payment should be taken into consideration when determining overall savings — particularly, if the homeowner is in a high tax bracket.

Since total savings will not exceed the cost of refinancing until after the third year at the earliest, this homeowner probably should not refinance unless he intends to remain in the house for at least this amount of time. An additional economic consideration is the fact that the equity build-up in the home will occur more rapidly under the new mortgage arrangement since he is paying $60 per month towards the principal as opposed to only $30.

Business briefs

Leasing mall space

NEWTON — Chatham Properties Realty Company of Newton, a subsidiary of C.D.C., acts as the exclusive broker for Chatham Investment Trust in the re-leasing of 2,000 square feet of retail space at the Indian Head Shopping Mall, located on Route 20 in Marlborough. The Indian Head Shopping Center consists of 142,000 square feet of prime retail space.

Mike Iodice, president of Chatham Properties, and Joseph Maurello, president of the Slack Stop Companies, were the principals in the negotiations.

The Slack Stop Company is a professional retailer of medium price, high quality clothing.

Chatham Properties has under negotiations an additional 2,000 square feet of retail space at the Center.

Restaurant buy-out

NEWTON — John's Atlantic Restaurant, 40 Atlantic Avenue in Marblehead, was purchased by Capuccino North, Inc. on August 6.

The new owners, Richard Keesan, president and founder of Capuccino's and Craig Miller, director of operations for Capuccino's, plan to open the third restaurant under that name joining the Brookline and Newton units which have been operating for nine years and eight years, respectively.

Bank goes public

University Bank and Trust Company has filed a Preliminary Offering Circular with the Massachusetts Commissioner of Banks for an initial public offering of 750,000 shares of its common stock.

The executive and operations center for the bank is located in Newton. The bank operates eight branch offices in Newton, Cambridge, Waltham, Woburn, Bedford, and Allston.

University Bank and Trust Company is a commercial bank engaged principally in making real estate loans, primarily for residential development and condominium conversion loans in the Greater Boston area. The bank also offers a wide range of commercial and personal banking services, including secured and unsecured loans to small businesses, professional organizations, and individuals.

Jewels & Gems

BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY

THE PERFECT SETTING

It has long been felt that a platinum setting is best suited for diamond rings and other precious stones. Platinum is very malleable. Platinum prongs can be maneuvered around a stone with less risk of damage. Platinum also is the longest enduring jewelry metal. It is why the world's most fabled diamonds, including the Hope and the Koh-i-Noor, are secured by platinum settings. Platinum has a deep white lustre that picks up light reflections. This characteristic enhances a diamond's brilliance and depth. It also dramatizes the size of the gem. Platinum does not compete or affect the color of a diamond. It only serves to hold and reflect its beauty.

A setting can only be as perfect as you want it to be. When you have expert craftsmen at CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" to design beautiful pieces your dreams will always come true. Whether you prefer yellow gold, white gold or platinum your gems will be set securely. Don't think of jewelry as gifts for just special occasions but as wonderful gifts to show you care any time of year. See us at 109 Dalby St., Newton. Stop in Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

United Way of Mass. Bay

Over 90 cents of every dollar you pledge to the United Way of Mass. Bay comes back to you and your neighbors in the form of services. If all the 165 or so human care agencies who are supported by your United Way had to raise all their own resources, a larger percentage of that money would be wasted on fund raising efforts. You should also know that the agencies themselves must continually show that they are spending their United Way money on necessary and valuable programs for all of us.

Another thing to think about when you make your pledge is that it will make it possible for a whole army of people to keep doing their great work.

A great way to do some good.

Frank Battista was completely in charge

Our Lady's captures National crown

Battista levels Clubbies

By Mike Stoller
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Our Lady's coach Frank Cooney had been waiting for this one, and as he found out Tuesday night at Burke Field, it pays to be patient.

Cooney's men were ready for battle, and they finished an onslaught of 18 hits with a 12-3 victory over the Newton Boys' Club to win the fifth and deciding game of the National League Finals.

Our Lady's had won the first two games before the Boys' Club came back to tie the series. But Frank Battista, the hard-luck loser in game three, was not to be outdone this time. The hard-throwing righthander tossed an eight-hitter, striking out seven while walking five.

"I was very impressed with Bubba's (Battista) pitching tonight, even though he tired," Cooney said. "I'm very happy."

Of course, Cooney also enjoyed his team's offensive attack on the Boys' Club. Center fielder Britt Ryan led the charge with four hits in five tries. The cruncher came in the top of the fourth, when he blasted a three-run triple to center to give Our Lady's a 7-1 lead.

Cooney said his club took batting practice early yesterday morning and then again before the game. It payed off, as six hitters in the line-up had at least two hits.

Second in line to Ryan were Sean McClellan and Ed McAvinn, who contributed three hits apiece. Andy Lyons, who belted a run-scoring double in the sixth, Paul Kearney and Ron Coppola each had two.

Our Lady's got the show underway in the second inning. McClellan doubled, McAvinn singled, and then, after two outs, Aldo Calcagni took center stage. The Our Lady's shortstop laced a single to right to score McClellan on a very close play at the plate.

And then occurred the baseball blooper of the night.

In an attempt to pick off McAvinn at second, Boys' Club catcher Colin Ryan rifled an accurate throw, but nobody was on the receiving end. Instead, the ball rolled to eternity and McAvinn and Calcagni scored with ease. How about that, Mel Allen?

As if to apologize for his sin, Ryan came roaring back in the bottom of the frame, ripping a triple into the left-field corner. Alex DeNucci followed with a walk and stole second. Then, after an out, Steve Fontano drilled a single to score Ryan.

But DeNucci, who tried to score, wasn't as lucky. A great throw by Britt Ryan in center nailed the sliding runner for the second out. Battista got the next hitter to ground out to end the rally.

Our Lady's increased their two-run lead to three, when Greg Larson (walk) scored on McClellan's fielder's choice in the third. Chris Bercury's single to right put Larson in scoring position.

A three-run lead for Battista is like giving Batman the batshield. The Joker couldn't win, and neither could the Boys' Club.

So, when Our Lady's top hurler received six more runs in the fourth, the victory was in the bag and Cooney could light up the cigar.

It was in that frame that Ryan struck with his three-run triple. Kearney (infield hit), Calcagni (error) and Battista (infield hit) all scored.

Battista gave up two more runs in going the distance, while the Boys' Club used four hurlers in the shellacking.

The summary:

OUR LADY'S(12)-Calcagni 5-1, Battista 2-1, B. Ryan 5-4, Coppola 5-2, Larson 3-0, Bercury 5-1, McClellan 4-3, McAvinn 4-3, Lyons 4-2, Kearney 4-2. Tot.41-18.

International playoffs

Troubadour to collide with C&K in titular series

NEWTON — The Troubadour Club knows how to make an opponent feel uneasy. Monday in game one of its Newton International League Murphy Division final playoff series against Oak Hill, Troubadour ganged up on the Cubs to the tune of 9-0 after two innings.

Tuesday, it was more of the same as Troubadour gained a 5-0 lead after three innings, hanging on to win, 10-6, in six innings at Newton South to sweep the best-of-three series.

The two-time defending league champion Troubadour Club will battle C&K Components, which swept its best-of-three Copp Division final from Carson Post Tuesday with a 12-4 victory. The divisional champions were to fight it out for the league championship beginning this week at Albemarle Field, depending upon the weather conditions.

Oak Hill had battled back to make it interesting on Monday, and Tuesday the strong-hearted Cubs did the same. This time, the Cubbies tied the score before their hopes were deflated by a big, five-run Troubadour rally in the top of the sixth.

While Oak Hill was running on its last leg, Troubadour had recently grown a new one. Several of the team's 15-year-old veterans have been filtering back into the lineup in the last few weeks after missing time with injuries. The new-old blood certainly helped.

"P.J. O'Toole missed five full weeks with a pulled hamstring, Judd Levine is coming off a seperated shoulder that kept him out for three weeks, and Sam Gottlieb fractured a small bone in foot and made his comeback last night," said Troubadour coach Joe Connors.

The fresh troops figured heavily in the scoring. O'Toole doubled home two runs in the first inning and singled home another in the third while Levine had a RBI-single in the big fifth inning and scored a run in the third. Gottlieb, who is not expected to be 100 percent ready to play until next week, sat on the bench.

With a 5-0 lead after three, Troubadour starter Derek Fergus was in business, but eight walks and three errors hurt him. The 14-year-old righthander allowed just four hits, but most of the hits followed walks or errors.

Bert Santucci followed an error and a walk with a two-run double in the fourth inning to spark a four-run Oak Hill surge that brought the Cubs to within a run.

A leadoff double in the fifth by John Hurwitz, who has been killing the ball in the playoffs, was followed by an error. Santucci then plated Hurwitz with a sacrifice fly to tie the game.

Troubadour snapped the tie in the sixth, knocking Oak Hill starter Jon Rouffe out of the ball game. Singles by Jim Lee and P.J. Timmons chased Rouffe and set the stage for Hurwitz, who walked Chris Guzzi to load the bases.

Hurwitz also walked Peter Hinteregger to force in the eventual game-winner before Fergus and Levine both singled in runs. Brian Berlandi then reached on an error to score another run.

C&K sweeps

Ron Fremault pitched three innings of no-hit ball and reliever Tom Donnellan scattered four hits over the last three innings as C&K Components downed Carson Post, 12-4, to complete the two-game sweep.

C&K will meet defending league champion Troubadour in the International League Championships starting on Monday.

C&K took a 4-0 lead in the top of the first and never looked back. Paul Fay stole home for a 1-0 lead and a sacrifice fly by Donnellan, an RBI-single by Ron Pang, and an error with Jim McMillen reaching accounted for the 4-0 lead.

A David Annese two-run double in the fourth put C&K up, 9-2, and three more runs in the fifth, keyed by a Fay RBI-double, wrapped things up.

Carson Post scored two runs in the third and two runs in the fourth. Peter LaCamera singled home Sam Lookner and later scored on an error in the third. Mike Fiske scored on the tail-end of a double steal and Greg LeBlanc came home on a Tony Pasquarosa fielder's choice in the fifth.

The summaries:

TROUBADOUR(10)-Hinteregger 4-0, Fergus 3-2, Levine 4-2, Berlandi 4-1, O'Toole 3-2, Russillo 3-0, Lee 4-1, McAuliffe 2-0, Timons 1-1, Talcoff 2-0, Guzzi 0-0. Tot. 30-10.

O'Toole homer spices easy victory for Newton East, 13-2

BRAINTREE — South Boston marked up Matt McCue for exactly one inning Sunday before the 12-year-old Newton East pitcher got tough as nails. And when he did, the lads from Southie paid the price.

McCue surrendered two hits and a pair of walks to fuel a two-run South Boston first inning, but allowed close to nothing the rest of the way as East took a 13-2 victory in a Braintree Youth Baseball League elimination game at Watson Park.

McCue was touched for only one more hit and a lonely walk over the remaining five innings. In that time, McCue fanned nine as the East offense rallied behind him.

Newton East will battle Brookfield tonight at 5:30 p.m. at Watson Park.

After the first half inning, Newton went to town. The team batted around in the fourth inning, scoring five runs, and Bob O'Toole crushed a three-run homer in the fifth to account for more of a cushion.

O'Toole's home run really hit the spot with the family, as the ball smashed the windshield on his father's car, which was parked in a lot just beyond the center field fence.

Stephen Lafer had doubled home two runs in a third inning.

The top third of Newton's batting lineup did the bulk of the damage, reaching base 11 times out of 12 chances. Leadoff man David Winicoff had three hits and a walk, scoring three runs total; McCue walked twice and doubled, scoring three times from the the second spot; Joe Blanchard, in the third spot, singled twice and walked twice and scored three runs.

Offense and pitching were not the only categories East excelled in. Steve Elliott made the catch of the day in right-center field to save a run in the fourth inning. With two outs and a man on second, Dan Teahan drove a liner to the gap in right-center which Elliott got on his horse and tracked down. The right fielder drew a bead on the liner, dove for the ball and, after turning a complete somersault, came up with the ball in his glove.

Saturday, East knocked off Holbrook, 4-3, behind the combined efforts of Steve Fishbach and Beau Burlingame.

Fishbach pitched two innings of no-hit ball before leaving the game as a defensive replacement at third base. Burlingame picked up where Fishbach left off and struck out nine over the last four innings.

Winicoff was the offensive hero, doubling home Marwan Kazimi, who had walked, with two outs in the sixth to break a 3-all tie.

Newton trailed, 2-0, in the third when Blanchard doubled home both Winicoff and McCue to tie the game.

East pulled ahead in the fourth as a ground ball by Burlingame plated Fishbach.

The summary:

NEWTON EAST(13)-Winickoff 3-3, McCue 2-1, Blanchard 2-2, O'Toole 3-1, Burlingame 3-1, Fischbach 1-1, Elliott 2-1, Lafer 3-1, Kazimi 3-1, Farina 0-0. Tot. 22-10.

Wallaby's gets jump on Buff's

NEWTON — The rivalry continues.

For the past three years, Wallaby's Pub and Buff's Pub have squared off in the Newton Twilight Softball League Finals, with Wallaby's taking the championship each time.

The fourth reunion between these two clubs began Thursday night at Albemarle Field, and Wallaby's picked up where it left off with a 13-12 victory in eight innings over Buff's, to take the first game in this best-of-three series.

Wallaby's had the last laugh in the bottom of the eighth, when everything that could go right for the eventual winners did.

Barbara Murphy led off the frame with a walk and advanced to second on May Bianco's booted grounder to second. Bianco was out a first, but the stage was set for Barbara Newton, who hit a line shot to the first baseman, who bobbled it. Murphy sped around third with the winning run. The second game of the series will be played at Albemarle Field Sunday night at 8:15.

Wallaby's had tied the contest in the seventh. After an out, Fee Monaco singled to right, Kathy Cotoia walked and Janet Ferguson grounded out to first, advancing the runners and setting the table for Sally Widerstrom. Widerstrom came through with a line drive single to center to score both runners.

Then, in the top of the eighth, winning pitcher Patti Tower got the side in order, striking out a batter along the way.

Newton AA Pop Warner practices set

NEWTON — Newton Athletic Association Pop Warner football practices will meet every day, Monday through Friday, starting at 5:30 o'clock.

Practices will be held every night at the Newton Highlands Playground. Boys nine to 14 years old are welcome to participate in the three team league. Players must report to practice with cleats and shorts.

Newton Pats hold practices at Albemarle

The Newton North entry in the Pop Warner Football Conference will hold practice sessions Monday through Friday, 6 to 7:30 p.m., at Albemarle Field, Coach Fred Dalicandro announced today.

The age eligibility is eight to 14 years old with the following weight requirements: 14, up to 115 pounds; 13, under 135 pounds.

The candidates will be assigned to four divisions — Peewee, Junior Peewee, Midget and Junior Midget, according to age and weight.

The practice sessions will continue until Labor Day.

Minuteman holds tryouts

The Minuteman Flames Youth Hockey program will be having tryouts for its open PeeWee All-star team (players born in 1974 and 1975) at Watertown Arena on Saturday, Aug. 22, at noon, and Sunday, Aug. 24, at 1 p.m.

Maxcey named Rookie of Year

Sherman awards 4 Legion MVPs

NEWTON — The toughest decision for a coach to make is not always which lineup to use. Singling out one player as the most important or the most talented among a group can be a nightmarish decision, as Newton Post 440 American Legion coach George Sherman knows.

Thursday night at the Newton Post 440's annual baseball banquet, in honor of the Legion team as well as the Stan Musial and International League clubs, Sherman was confronted with the problem of selecting a single Most Valuable Player Award from a group of four candidates.

Sherman did the only thing he could do.

"We didn't have a single MVP," he said, "because I have four kids who have given me their heart and sole for three years, and when it came down to picking one of those four I just couldn't do it."

Tom Casey, Jeff Sherman, Chuck Proia, and Alex DeNucci all received awards in a rare four-way split of the MVP honors.

"These four kids are very special to me and will always be on my team," Sherman said.

Casey "came to me as a 16-year-old and he did anything and everything that was asked of him for three straight years. And he did it with a smile."

Sherman, who doubles as the coach's son, "had the best attendance record of any player on the team. Jeff made many vital plays with many vital hits. He won a few games for us, and he saved a few also."

Proia holds a special place in Sherman's heart. The full-time second baseman traded in his infield duty for a spot in the injury-ridden pitching staff.

"Who could forget the 14 inning game he lost in Arlington," Sherman said of an extra-innings, suspended game that Proia started and finished. "And then he came back to win two in a row against league leading Natick and Sudbury."

DeNucci was the team "jack rabbit. He was our leadoff man for three years, and he's led the team all three years in on-base percentage and runs scored."

In addition to the MVP awards, Sherman presented Rookie of the Year honors to George Maxcey, the 10th Player Award to Jim Giddon, and the Norcross Award to Ed Veiking.

Maxcey, Sherman said, will be the first player to play all four years for him. The most years any player has ever played has been three.

"He's 15, and he's got outstanding baseball talent," Sherman said of Maxcey, a soon-to-be sophomore at Newton North High. "We're looking for big things from him in the future."

As a rookie, Maxcey batted .305.

Giddon completed his first and last year with the Legion crew, and the 18-year old left with a bang. After being shuffled around from the outfield to third base to first base, Giddon finally settled down to behind the plate, and stabilty did wonders.

In the last two weeks of the season, the recently graduated Newton North Tiger batted .360 and "was a vital cog" in a season-ending winning streak.

Veiking shuffled from position to position, too, but Sherman said the recent Watertown High grad never made an issue of his lack of playing time.

"It never dampened his attitude," Sherman said. "He was there night after night to do whatever he could do. The Norcross Award is presented annually to the player who best exemplifies the spirit of the game, enthusiam for the game, and the general demenor in which the game should be played in."

Sherman said that all members of the team were presented jackets.

Janet Bishop of Newton

Bishop garners N.E. Senior swim crown

Janet Bishop of West Newton, swimming for Bernal's Gator Swim Club, has added the title of New England Senior Long Course Champion to a growing list.

The diminutive Bishop — she has yet to reach five-two — earned her title with a victory in the 200-meter butterfly at the championship meet held at the Smith Swimming Center on the campus of Brown University in Providence, R.I.

Her winning time of 2:23.21 was seven one-hundreths of a second faster than friend, teammate, and fellow finalist, Courtney Chubb of Bedford. Ironically, two days before, the tables had been reversed, with Chubb and Bishop going first and second respectively in the 100-meter fly.

"Courtney and I are really good friends out of the water," Bishop said, "but friendships end when you climb onto the blocks. At that point, I don't care how good a friend you are. I just don't like to lose."

Winning and losing are no strangers to the co-captain of the 1987 Newton North High School swim team. Joining the Gators in 1978 as an 11-year-old, she quickly found out that there were a number of teammates and competitiors who swam a great deal faster.

"Coach Bernal has really taught me not just how to swim faster," she says, "but how to swim smarter. ... how to build in the longer events or how to go all out in the shorter ones."

?ernal's training seems to have paid off, much as it has in other cases, includig that of another West Newton native, Katie King. According to Bernal, "We've always had the best 200-flyer in New England, ever since the team started. Janet seems to be the successor to Katie's title."

Successor may too mild a word for Bernal to use. Two years ago, Bishop staked her claim to the short course title at the New England Championships in Exeter, N.H. In defense of her title this past winter, she posted a meet record time. Last summer, her time at the Junior National Championships in Fort Lauderdale qualified her for seventh place.

Are the 1988 Olympics a part of Bishop's future plans? "No way," she laughs. "That's two years away. First, I'll probably be over the hill, but more important, I'll be in college, and that comes first. Swimming has been great. It can't go on forever, but it's a lot of fun. I'm just going to take it one thing at a time."

Offense holds key for South lacrosse

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The reasons are many but there's no escaping the conclusion: this was a disappointing season for the Newton South lacrosse team.

The Lions were coming off a Division 2 state championship. Though that club was heavily hurt by graduation, there were 14 seniors on the team this year, so Coach Paul Murphy had a right to expect a little more from his team than its 8-7 final record.

"It was a disappointing season, no question," he said. "Offensive inconsistency hurt, and inexperience hurt us in the end."

The Lions may eventually reap some benefit from this year's problems. Many of the same people — particularly on offense — who were inexperienced this season will get another shot next year.

Still, South is losing those 14 seniors, most of whom were regulars. Alex Levine has been the goalie for three years, and will be tough to replace. Defensemen Seth Oliver, Jim Mercer and Scott Goldberg all performed well.

At midfield, regulars Dave Abroms, Neil Schwartz, Alex Olin and Chris Berwind have moved on, as has attackman Mark Dubnoff.

But that leaves quite a few people coming back, especially at attack and midfield. The attack should be the strong point of the team, and may be one of the best offenses in Division 2.

Jon Gleason and Rama Malone lead the returnees up front, as they combined for 39 points this season.

Gleason, a junior, led the club in goals with 16 and added three assists for 19 points. Malone, only a sophomore, finished with 20 points, second on the team only to Abroms, who had 26.

Also bringing back experience are Judd Levine and Matt Goldberg. Goldberg started for most of the first half of the season and accounted for 11 points. Levine came on strong toward the end of the season.

Also showing promise at the end of the year was Dominic Costa, a senior-to-be with a hard shot.

"All the kids will be a little more confident and quicker," said Murphy of his attack candidates.

The plethora of experienced attackmen may result in some of them moving back to midfield next spring. Much of this season Murphy used five people up front, but he indicated that he may cut that back to three next year and use the extra bodies to flesh out the midfield lines.

Moving the attackmen isn't a desperation move to help the midfield. Rather, it's a case of making a strong position even better. The Lions already have some good middies to build around.

Leading the charge is Paolo Sepe. Not a big scorer, Sepe "leads by example," according to Murphy.

"He should be outstanding again next year," the coach added. "The strongest part of his game is defense. He's very good in the open field, picking up ground balls."

Sophomore John Morgan played regularly on the same line with Sepe last year, so it's likely they'll be paired up again in 1987. Morgan is the best scorer among the returning middies.

Another soph, Scott Perrin, saw quite a bit of playing time this year and should be a leading candidate for the open slot on the first line. He has a good stick.

Others who should help in the middle included junior Jeff Brewington and sophomore Rob Hillis.

The numbers and raw ability are there, but Murphy admits, "the kids need more playing time, more experience. We played a lot of sophomores this year."

The defense, a strong point for South for the past few years, will need some shoring up. The three starters, plus goalie Alex Levine, are all gone.

There are two returning lettermen back on defense. John Hillis and Rich Blumenthal both saw quite a bit of time. Blumenthal, a sophomore, started several games during the course of the year.

A large group will battle for the open job. Among the candidates on their way up from the junior varsity are juniors Andy Reynolds and Pete Rosbeck and sophomore Jim Horgan.

All of the potential defensemen need work in the off-season.

"They have to work on some stick work and on one-on-one play," said the coach.

The heir-apparent in the net is sophomore Brian Lowinger, who started for the 14-3 junior varsity team. In addition to his quickness making the initial stop, Lowinger has a good outlet pass. That could be important, as the Lions want to play a fast-breaking style next spring. They've got some speed and since the team doesn't have great size, it will have to make use of that speed.

If the defense comes along, South should be right back in the fight for a tournament berth next year. Goals shouldn't be a problem, but there will be some pressure on the defense to keep the Lions close early.

Fruhan picked for state's soccer team

Billy Fruhan, a 13-year-old Newton resident, has been selected as a member of the Boys Under 13½ Massachusetts State Select Soccer Team. Fruhan is one of 18 boys in the state who were chosen by the Massachusetts Olympic Development Program after a series of statewide tryouts.

The Masschusetts State Team, under the direction of Newton resident Barry Savage, traveled to Penn State University on the weekend of June 27, 28 and 29 to compete against other state teams in a competition sponsored by the United States Youth Soccer Association.

Massachusetts battled the New Hampshire 13½ team to a scoreless tie in its first match, fought to a tough 1-1 standoff against the Rhode Island 14½ team, and lost a close match to the Delaware Under 13½ team, 3-2.

Blanchard elbows East to crown

CANTON — Bring out the banner for the Newton East baseball champions.

East captured the Southeastern Massachusetts League crown Thursday night with a 6-1 victory over Braintree American at Crawford Field.

In the first inning, winning pitcher Joe Blanchard helped his own cause with a double, and went to third on a passed ball. Bob O'Toole followed with a walk and then confused Braintree with a delayed steal attempt. As things would turn out, he would only go half way, but it gave Blanchard plenty of time to score.

Dave Winnicoff got the show underway in the third, blasting a double. Blanchard followed with a walk and O'Toole reached on an error to plate a run. Next in line was David DiStefano, who promptly singled in one more.

Then, in the fourth, singles by Beau Burlingame and Steve Fishbach made it first and third for Alex Cote, who squeezed home a run.

Two more runs in the sixth would finish the assault. Say hello to Blanchard and O'Toole again. The former singled and the latter doubled him home. DiStefano's infield hit plated O'Toole for the final run.

Defensively, Newton made just one error, and on the mound, Blanchard seemed ready for the cameras. The 12-year-old righthander allowed only one run.

McCue twirled a four-hitter and struck out 10 to lead Newton East into the final Wednesday with a 6-1 victory over Canton at Bird Field, Norwood.

McCue allowed a leadoff single by John Finn in the second inning and three hits in the third inning when he was touched for his only run-against, but McCue rebounded to no-hit the Canton group the rest of the way. He walked just one batter in going the distance.

Two authors slated to speak at library

NEWTON — Two important library events will take place this fall at the Newton Free Library, 414 Centre St., Newton Corner.

Lou Sternburg lies on a rocking bed that keeps him alive. View From The Seesaw is the inspiring story of their pursuit of an active, productive life.

The reception is Tuesday Sept. 30, 1986 7:30 p.m.

Haru Matsukata Reischauer will discuss her new book Samurai and Silk: A Japanese and American Heritage.

A reception will follow Tuesday, October 7, 1986 7:30 p.m.

Local nurse to present seminar on eating well

WATERTOWN — Newton resident Mary O'Brien, R.N., Ph.D. will present one of two free seminars on eating for well-being, Tuesday, August 26, and stress management, Wednesday, August 27. Both programs begin at 7 p.m.

The seminars will be held at the Charlesbridge Center, Parker Building, 124 Watertown St. (Route 16), Watertown. There is free parking at the door.

Mary O'Brien, R.N., Ph.D., Staff Psychologist at the Center will discuss how people with chronic gastrointestinal disorders can select the right foods to avoid discomfort and to achieve optimum well-being.

Karen Kurlander, Ph.D., will present the seminar on "Handling Stress." A licensed psychologist, Kurlander will demonstrate how people with gastrointestinal disorders can reduce stress and make relaxation a greater part of their life. How to recognize chronic illness as a source of tension will also be discussed.

For more information about both of these free programs, call the Center at 923-7010.

The Charlesbridge Center teaches people who have chronic gastrointestinal difficulty to use proper nutrition and to handle stress for better management of their condition. The Center offers programs to meet the needs of persons with chronic intestinal disorders such as Crohn's, Colitis, Irritable Bowel Syndrome, Diverticulitis, and Ulcers.

Collections on display

NEWTON — The Newton Free Library will hold an exhibit of collections of members of the library staff at the Main Library, 414 Centre St., Newton Corner, Sept. 3 through 29.

"The Staff Collects" exhibit will include collections of hats, needlework, bookmarks, books, doll furniture, game programs and more.

Staff members will discuss the art of collecting, and their collections, at a reception on Wednesday, Sept. 10, 5:30 p.m.

All are welcome.

Poetry reading at arts center

NEWTON — The Newton Arts Center will present a Poetry Reading with Nadya Aisenberg and Marguerite Bouvard at 8 p.m. on Friday, September 5. The Newton Arts Center is located at 61 Washington Park, Newtonville, 964-3424. Admission is free.

Rebecca Parris

Parris to sing during weekend concert series

NEWTON — The Mall at Chestnut Hill officially marks the end of summer with the return of its weekend concert series, beginning Sunday, September 6 at 2 p.m. with Rebecca Parris.

In the past two years, Parris has established herself as the most talented song stylist in Boston and as a favorite of The Mall's concert lovers. The Boston Globe, which first sat up and took notice of Ms. Parris during its 1984 Jazz Festival, has alternately compared her with such greats as Sarah Vaughan, Janis Joplin and Nancy Wilson.

A Newton native, Parris' repertoire ranges from country to swing to hard rock, but jazz is her true love. Boston nightclubs clamor for her talents, and Boston critics continue to praise her voice and her energy.

Jazz pianists, popular vocalists, classical instrumentalists, blues artists, gospel singers and more can be seen and heard every Saturday and Sunday afternoon in The Mall's Center Court from 2 to 3 p.m.

Rare Plant Auction at mall next month

NEWTON — In support of the Arnold Aboretum of Harvard University, the Mall at Chestnut Hill will host a display of unusual plants in a special preview of the Arboretum's Annual Plant Sale and Rare Plant Auction.

Examples of the flora that is sent to Boston from all over the world can be seen at the Mall from Sept. 3 through Sept. 21, with the plant sale and auction taking place at the Case Estates of the Arboretum in Weston.

The Mall's indoor gardens will be planted with an assortment of extraordinary plants, trees, and shrubs that are seldom seen outside of their native habitat.

The mall's horticulturist, Allen C. Haskell, will install rare species from Asia, the Middle East, Europe and America. Plants will be identified by descriptive material available at each garden site.

Located in Boston's Jamaica Plain, the Arnold Arboretum of Harvard University was established in 1872 and named for its benefactor, James Arnold. It is the first and oldest arboretum in America intended for both university and public use, and it is among the most renowned, comprehensive and actively used botanical gardens in the country.

Over 260 acres of hills, valleys, meadows and stream beds are planted with over 6,000 species of trees, shrubs, plants and vines.

The Arnold Arboretum is an international center for plant and education. The Case Estates in Weston serves as nursery and experimental planting site and it is here that a plant sale and auction of rare plant species is held yearly on Sept. 21. The Case Estates are approximately 13 miles west of Boston on Route 20.

A nature lover makes a purchase at the Arnold Aboretum's annual Plant Sale at the Case Estates in Weston. The Mall at Chestnut Hill will preview many rare plants.

Medford fair seeks area artisans

NEWTON — Newton artists and craftspeople are being sought by the Medford Arts Council for its 16th annual festival by the Mystic.

The two-day event, held on the bank of the Mystic River just outside Medford Square, will take place this year on Saturday, Sept. 6 and Sunday, Sept. 7.

Each year, the festival attracts painters, potters, weavers, woodworkers and all manner of artisans from throughout the greater Boston area and beyond.

In addition to exhibition and offering their works for sale, participants compete for ribbons and popular awards.

If they choose, they may also vye for purchase prizes. Last year, awards totalled more than $2,000.

Reservations for the festival are now being accepted.

A special discount is offered to exhibitors who sign up by Aug. 20. All entries received by Sept. 2 will be listed in the festival's progam.

Further information and/or registration forms are available by calling the Medford Arts Council office at 1 George P. Hassett Drive, Medford, or by writing the council at P.O. Box 239, Medford, Mass. 02155.

Ruth C. Boule'

Resident chosen to play for All-American Marching Band

NEWTON — Ruth C. Boule' of 72 Randlett Pk., West Newton, will be continuing her studies as an engineering major at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, where she is majoring in music, after a summer in which she distinguished herself at the Statue of Liberty ceremonies.

She was chosen to be a member of the All-American Marching Band. She was one of the 120 trumpeters who performed the opening fanfare at Governor's Island; opened the Boston Pops concert at Liberty State Park, New Jersey; began closing ceremonies at the Meadowlands, playing the same fanfare that was written for the occasion by John Williams.

The Marching Band also performed a 10-minute drill spectacular at closing ceremonies. The band was made up of 500 college students representing all 50 states. Members of the band were recommended by their directors and they went through an application process involving thousands of musicians. Another area member was Rose Werblin of Waltham.

Ruth has been a member of the UMass Minuteman Marching Band for three years. The daughter of Gilbert and Mary Boule', she is a graduate of Newton North High School, Class of 1983.

She was the recipient of a scholarship from the Soft Touch Band, a non-profit big band group who contributed all proceeds in the form of awards to area students with an interest in music.

VFW honored at convention

NEWTON — At the recent installation of officers of Newton Post #1664 Veterans of Foreign Wars, Daniel G. Valente of 22 Pettee St., Newton Upper Falls was installed as commander for the 1986-87 year.

Robert Provengher, commander of District 3, VFW was the installing officer. It was announced at the installation ceremony, which was held at Nonantum Post 440, American Legion, that Newton Post #1664 VFW would be honored at the annual state convention of the VFW, in Worcester, Mass., for having obtained the largest increase in membership during 1985-86 of any VFW post within the district.

Newton Post #1664 has initiated a special Vietnam veterans membership campaign with Commander Valente asking all Newton Vietnam veterans with overseas service to consider joining the Veterans of Foreign Wars and join with other organized veterans in the task to protect rights, benefits and entitlements of veterans.

Commander Valente advised that interested veterans may contact him at 244-2331.

Aquinas College courses begin Sept. 15

NEWTON — Aquinas Junior College's Center for Continuing Education in Newton is offering courses in the evenings to enhance skills, introduce students to new ideas and give one the opportunity to advance in the work force.

Courses in accounting, English composition, marketing, medical terminology, work processing, shorthand and typing are just a sample of the courses being offered this fall. All courses will run Sept. 15 to Dec. 18 on various evenings from 6:30 to 9:10 p.m.

For those specifically interested in working with young children an evening course entitled Introduction to the Special Needs Child will be offered Monday and Thursday evenings Sept. 12 to Oct. 23, 6 to 9:10 p.m. This is one of four courses needed to receive a certificate in the Aquinas Early Childhood Education program.

Many of the same courses are offered during the day. A schedule can be arranged for students to come to school on a part-time basis and still have a job or be at home when children arrive home from school. Financial aid is available for eligible students.

For more information on evening courses or any programs offered during the day call Aquinas Junior College at 969-4400 or ext. 21.

"The Single Persons Answer"

Published Thursdays in The Daily Transcript and the News Tribune and in the Transcript Weekly Newspaper

This page is the perfect place for the unmarried, widowed, divorced or separated to meet that "special someone." It's a way to take charge of your own life in a dignified, confidential manner. Best of all, it will be someone who lives fairly close to you.

THE SINGLES ADVISOR

RAYMOND J. CABOT, LCSW

Separation and the house key question

Dear Ray:
My husband and I separated almost a year ago. Ours was to be the rare "civilized" divorce. When John moved out of our home, I even helped him move into his new apartment and made drapes for the windows. I did not ask him for the keys to our house nor did I have the locks changed.

We maintained such a cooperative arrangement that John dropped by at will to mow the lawn, repair things around the house, or to play with the children. Some weekends John would even drop by to fix breakfast for the kids and me before we awoke. At first this free access to the house was fine with me. It even seemed like the sensible thing to do.

However, for the past several months, I have been feeling as though his dropping in is interfering with my life. I've started going to a singles group and I've been asked out on a few dates. I'm afraid to even ask a date to come in for a cup of coffee for fear that John may drop by.I'm not sure how either one of us might react and I feel that it is unfair to put a date in such an awkward position. What can I do to correct this situation?

D. L., Westwood

Dear D. L.,
The dream of many who fantasize about a nice, friendly divorce often ends up with the secret wish to become widowed. The issue of not asking for the house key at the time of separation often stems from an inability to admit that one's marriage is truly over. The house key provides a symbolic connection with the past and a hope that a miraculous change may save the marriage. And, the old traditions of woman being wife, mother, and caregiver while the man is cast as father, protector, and provider are traditions that do not change easily.

Even though John welcomed your assistance in setting up his apartment, I doubt if he offered you a key to it. Free access to the family home allows a man to feel connected with the familiar. It gives him a place to go when he doesn't know what to do with himself. For the woman, it provides an element of security–that someone is still looking after her and taking care of those chores with which she is unfamiliar.

Over a period of time, resentment can build for a woman as she begins defining a new role for herself. She begins to view the husbands unannounced visits as an intrusion on her privacy. The husband may be trying to control or manipulate or hold on to the past. If he has started to form a new relationship his visits will diminish.

There are several things that you can do. You can have a heart-to-heart talk with your husband and explain your change of feelings and ask for the key. This might test just how amicable a relationship you have. Don't be too surprised if his reaction is one of anger.

Tea Leaf china is made for common folks

By Country Home
A Meredith Magazine

Imagine the furor at London's Sultaness Head coffeehouse in 1658 when tea, that coppery-crisp refreshment, first steamed under Western noses.

Two centuries later, American ladies were just as taken with another glistening novelty on their tables — Tea Leaf china, a white ironstone decorated with a sprightly copper sprig.

Around the mid-1800s, the most popular china in America was English ironstone, available in many attractive body shapes and embossed designs, as a durable everyday replacement for dullish pewter and woodenware.

This was not the fancy china of lace-covered tables; instead it was used in the modest homes of farmers, miners, millers and country people across America.

Perhaps to prolong ironstone's appeal, several potteries began adorning white blanks with clover leaves and other floral designs in metallic luster. These so-called pre-Tea Leaf patterns cultivated a fertile market in which Tea Leaf could flourish.

How the motif came to sprout is unknown. But the most probable source for the device, according to Country Home, is not the botanical tea leaf at all, which in truth little resembles the stylized ornament. The skillful potters of Staffordshire probably turned to native flora for inspiration, letting their imaginations transform the wood anemone or wild strawberry or brewer's hops into their emblem.

What he named "Lustre Band and Spray" or "Lustre Band and Sprig" appeared on an ironstone blank registered in 1856, though exactly when the tea leaf decoration was applied is uncertain.

The Staffordshire region in west central England has been renowned for ceramics since the 17th century. Manufacturers were so industrious that they nearly deforested the countryside in stoking their ovens, which ultimately spurred the mining of coal for fuel. Blessed with quality clay, plentiful coal and skilled labor, "The Potteries," as the area was called, sent goods around the world.

Consequently, Tea Leaf is scarce in Britain. By 1900, almost the entire Tea Leaf output of about 30 makers had arrived on American shores, often used as ballast on the great transatlantic sailing ships. Its hardiness made it the perfect export. Tea Leaf traveled unscathed in 100-pound barrels and reached homes all over the country via riverboat, peddler's cart, backpack, and Sears' and Ward's mail-order catalogs. A complete service for 12 sold for about $10.

Most Tea Leaf is similar to Anthony Shaw's original "Lustre Band and Spray": a coppery three-part sprig and bud on a white body rimmed with a generous band.

There were also many variants. The Clementson Brothers offered a "Teaberry" or "Coffeeberry" design, a curvy sprig accompanied by a tiny bunch of berries. Elsmore & Forster's specialty was "Morning Glory," a more flowery elaboration on the simple spray. The Springfield, Ill., home of Abraham Lincoln, whose family may have used Tea Leaf, has a John Maddock variation on the traditional five-lobed tea leaf bearing only three lobes.

At the peak of Tea Leaf's popularity, the 1880s, America's potteries entered into competition with England's. East Liverpool, Ohio, became our Staffordshire. In fact, some of the Potteries' leading families reestablished themselves in the United States.

Some 20 manufactories churned out Tea Leaf, their technology often surpassing that of their British counterparts. They could not, however, surpass the snobbish preference for English goods, which led some domestic potters to fabricate trademarks that might easily be mistaken for famous foreign ones.

Just when the American home seemed to be steeped in Tea Leaf — dinnerware on the table, bath sets on the washstand, tea sets in the parlor — its appeal went flat. It was last advertised in catalogs around 1910, after a solid half century of fashion, and revived spottily from the 1960s through 1980 in modern reproductions.

It is left to today's collectors to rekindle Tea Leaf's once lustrous glow. Ironically, ironstone's commonness makes that task all the more challenging. For unlike prized porcelain, preserved through generations, inexpensive Tea Leaf, once chipped or cracked, often wound up on the junk pile or as a chicken-feed bowl.

Clues on making of better quality products

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

You open the door and the doorknob comes off in your hand. You take the appliance out of the box and it doesn't work. The new alarm clock doesn't ring. The sofa is delivered broken.

These home furnishings purchasing experiences are not as unusual as they should be. That's why nowadays, "if you ask 100 people if they want better quality products, at least 98 of them will say yes," says Dr. J. Edwards Deming.

According to Deming, a statistician who has recently been attracting attention through his efforts to tell us how to make better products, most employees are already doing their best and are not responsible for bad quality products. The problem is that management doesn't know what to do, and consequently sabotages employee efforts.

He says ploys such as upping production goals, grading employees and putting up slogans have been counterproductive. Most efforts have started at the end of the system, with a defective product, not at the beginning where they should, "because by the time the customer complains, it's too late."

Deming's message that companies can improve their products by instituting a more rational production system and by trusting employees to get on with the job appears deceptively simple.

One reason corporate executives are now listening is that he taught these seemingly simple methods to the Japanese after World War II and in the process helped them restructure their industries.

Their postwar "miracle" was based on several ideas: first of all, that a good production system turns out quality products and that statistical methods can be used to test a system to see if it is working properly. Deming taught that if it were not operating properly, fixing the system would be more effective than blaming employees for its flaws.

The Japanese also accepted Deming's central idea that better quality products cost less to produce, since there is less re-work and less waste of time and materials. Further, since consumers greatly prefer quality to junk, he says there is a substantial competitive advantage to a company that produces excellent products.

Though Deming, an expert in using statistical methods to improve factory operations, is quick to say these ideas are not original with him, he is the one who happened to put them together into a coherent program for change.

In recognition of his importance to them, the Japanese government in 1960 awarded Deming its Emperor's Medal. In the United States, an appearance on a network television program in 1980 popularized his ideas and led to an increase in corporate clients as well as greater attendance at the seminars he gives about 20 times a year under the auspices of George Washington University.

He has also published his ideas on productivity and competition in a book, "Quality, Productivity, and Competitive Position," and teaches at New York University's Graduate Business school.

The Deming program is embodied in a series of pointers which he says will improve the company's product quality and lead to lower costs and a more satisfactory work environment.

These pointers start with management rethinking company goals, making the improvement of products and service primary. He adds that after adopting this new philosophy, management has to convince workers the new policy is for keeps.

He says mass inspection as a method of assuring quality has to be eliminated, and a better production system substituted. Similarly, numerical production goals and piecework actually impede quality since employees concentrate on meeting the goal rather than producing good work.

To get a better system may require getting better equipment or raw materials, changing manufacturing techniques or, perhaps, something as simple as rearranging work space.

Management also has to end the practice of awarding business on price alone and instead work with suppliers who do a good job.

Once some improvement is realized, the company will still have to continue working to make things better. Deming says better training on the job and more helpful methods of supervision are also necessary.

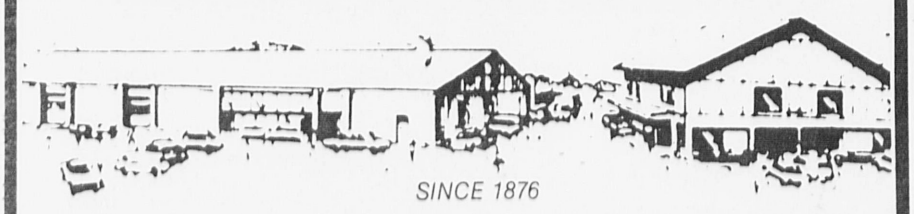

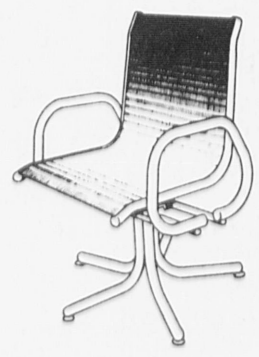

The way things are now in many factories, there is a climate of fear in which people are afraid to ask questions or suggest improvements. Many are also afraid that if products are made more efficiently, they may lose their jobs. Management should create a vigorous program of education and training to make clear to employees they will be trained for new jobs if their current position is no longer necessary.

He says fear often leds to barriers between research, design, production and sales departments, keeping people working at cross purposes.

What can home furnishings consumers do to ensure better product quality? Never one to flinch at hard truths, Deming says they can't do much since they aren't responsible for the problems and don't have the power to fix them. However, making buying decisions based on quality and product value, rather than price alone, is one way to encourage those manufacturers who do care about quality.

Police briefs

Stop & Shop held-up, man takes $1,200

CHESTNUT HILL — A man walked into the Stop & Shop last Monday night and after hanging around the store for a half-hour, he pulled a gun on a customer service representative and got away with $1,200, police said.

According to police the suspect waited until the store was fairly quiet at about 9 p.m. before he made his move. The store employee said the gun was a small automatic with a silver handle. The suspect ordered the employee to put the money in a brown paper bag and then he left the store, police said.

The suspect is described as a black male in his late 20's with a slight build and a mustache with a space between his two front teeth, police said.

Man mugged in Centre playground

NEWTON CENTRE - A man walking through the Newton Centre Playground on Beacon Street was mugged and beat up by four men last Tuesday night, police said. The thieves reportedly got away $10 in cash.

The victim told police he was taking a shortcut through the park on his way home at about 10 p.m. when four white males in their late teens jumped him, police said. The assailants reportedly punched the victim several times and threw him to the ground and emptied his pockets.

Case of casette tapes stolen from car

NEWTON — A case of cassette tapes, reportedly worth $300, was stolen out of a 1985 Mitsubishi Starion parked on Silver Birch Road Friday night. The passenger side window was smashed by the thief. A witness saw a white male wearing a red shirt throw a brick through the window around 11 p.m., according to police.

Burglary at Commonwealth golf course

NEWTON — A golf glove and $10 in change were stolen from the clubhouse at the Newton Commonwealth Golf Course early Saturday morning, according to reports. Police responded to a burglar alarm there around 1 a.m. The 18th hole marker had been used to smash the glass out of the front door.

CHESTNUT HILL — A Marshfield resident's 1984 Nissan Centra was stolen from the General Cinema parking lot at the Chestnut Hill Mall Sunday afternoon, police said.

Officers nab thieves quickly

By David Weber
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Alert police work and efficient use of the police radio system Sunday morning resulted in the arrest of three teenagers for the theft of two cars.

According to police reports, Officer John Greenwood was driving a patrol car west on Watertown Street around 2 a.m. when he noticed two cars coming toward him.

Thinking the drivers' behavior was suspicious, Greenwood turned his car around and began following them. One of the cars, a white Oldsmobile, turned onto a side street, and Greenwood continued to follow the other car, a red Buick.

Greenwood stopped the car and asked the driver for a license. While standing beside the car, he noticed that the ignition had been damaged. He ran a computer check on the car and found it had been reported stolen from Dorchester. Before arresting the driver of the Buick, he broadcast a description of the white Oldsmobile and its two passengers.

Officer David Tempesta, on foot patrol in the Nonantum Square area, heard the broadcast just as a man approached and said his sister's white Oldsmobile had been stolen from Linwood Avenue. The man told Tempesta he thought he had just seen the car in the area.

Tempesta made a second radio broadcast, saying the white Olds was suspected of being stolen. Moments later, Officers Joseph Sturniolo and John Nolan were in a cruiser driving west on Washington Street when they saw the white Olds heading east.

They turned around and followed the car as it made a left onto Walnut Park. The Olds began to speed up and failed to handle a turn onto Waban Street, hitting two parked cars.

The Olds sustained front-end damage, causing it to lose speed. Two males jumped from the car while it was still moving.

Nolan chased and apprehended the driver, but the passenger eluded Sturniolo.

Police then broadcast a description of the third man to surrounding departments. At about 6:45 a.m., a Metropolitan Police officer found a teenager who said he was lost. The teen was detained until Newton Police could be called in to identify him as the person who escaped them on Waban Street.

Two of the men arrested were 16-year-old Brockton youths. The other was a 17-year-old who gave a Lake Worth, Fla., address. All three were charged with larceny of a motor vehicle, possession of burglarious tools and malicious damage.

The two who were in the white Olds, which wrecked into the cars on Waban Street, were also charged with reckless driving and leaving the scene of an accident, according to police.

Can vitamins cure you?

Think vitamins will make you look like this? Think again. Jimmy Lee, 24, of Norwood, says he keeps fit by working out four hours a day, six days a week and eating a varied, lowfat diet that excludes red meat and features lots of leafy, green vegetables. Rick Kelley Photo

By Charlotte Meryman
In Focus Editor

In a country that thrives on instant gratification, pill-popping is practically a national pasttime.

So it's no surprise that even in these health-conscious times, many Americans are turning to vitamins as the mythical panacea that will help them run faster, think better and live longer.

But while vitamin sellers are enjoying robust profits, nutritionists say consumers are not getting the same healthy benefits.

At best, they say, vitamin consumption can be a waste of money. And for those who take large doses of a single vitamin, it can pose serious health hazards.

"Americans are just into too much," says Joyce Goldstein, an outpatient nutritionist and registered dietitian at Faulkner Hospital in Jamaica Plain. "They figure if a little is good, more must be better.

"When you hear claims being made for vitamins and minerals, you really have to look at the source," she advises. "You have to look at who is making the claims."

Goldstein and others in the nutrition field attribute much of the confusion over vitamins to misleading advertising and other promotion, which portrays them as "health insurance," as a tool in fighting "stress," and as a cure for everything from terminal cancer to anxiety.

But vitamins are no miracle drugs. They are chemical compounds needed by the body in small amounts to regulate the conversion of food into energy and living tissues. Scientific tests have not shown them to be cures for any illnesses other than vitamin deficiencies.

Goldstein likens food to a match and vitamins to the strike that lights it. The body needs vitamins to process the food it takes in. But eating more vitamins won't extract more energy from the food, just as striking a match again after it is lit won't affect the flame.

The only way to get more energy or to feel less tired and stressed is to eat a balanced diet with plenty of carbohydrates, exercise regularly and get enough sleep. And if you don't do those things, all the vitamins in the world won't make a bit of difference in how you feel.

Companies marketing "stress formula" vitamins base their claims on a 1952 report from the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council, a branch of the National Academy of Sciences, which serves as a scientific adviser to the federal government and which sets the Recommended Daily Allowances (RDAs) for vitamins and minerals.

The report found that those undergoing extreme physical stress — such as general surgery, serious burns or major fractures — appeared to burn up certain vitamins faster than under normal circumstances. But the physical "stress" referred to in the study is not the same as that experienced by athletes and has no connection to the psychological stress implied in many advertisements.

Vitamin supplements are often advertised as a kind of health insurance, — a protection against "missing out" on a vitamin or two when you don't eat a well-rounded diet.

In fact, says Goldstein, the daily requirements for vitamins are easily met through a balanced, varied diet. And missing a vitamin for even a few days will not create a deficiency. So while daily vitamin supplements are not going to do any harm, they are probably not going to help, either.

She adds that people with inadequate diets are more likely to have mineral deficiencies than vitamin shortages.

Taken in "megadoses" — 10 or more times the RDA — vitamins actually become drugs, says Goldstein. And their overuse constitutes drug abuse.

Particularly dangerous in high levels are the fat-soluble vitamins — A, D, E and K — which are stored by the body and can build up to toxic levels over time if taken in large amounts.

The water-soluble vitamins cannot be stored by the body and must be replenished daily. These include vitamin C and the eight B-complex vitamins — thiamin (B-1), riboflavin (B-2), niacin, B-6, pantothenic acid, biotin, B-12 and folic acid.

Taking extra doses of water-soluble vitamins is also of no benefit, since the body simply excretes what it cannot use. And occasionally high doses of even water-soluble vitamins can be harmful, particularly since the various body chemicals interact and high levels of one substance may inhibit absorption of another.

Vitamin fiction and fact

VITAMIN C: Vitamin C can be found in citrus fruits, tomatoes, raw cabbage, potatoes, strawberries and cantaloupe. The RDA for adults is 60 mg a day — the amount contained in 4 ounces of orange juice.

Two-time Nobel prize winner Linus Pauling believed large doses of vitamin C could prevent colds and increase the survival time of patients with terminal cancer. But controlled tests have failed to prove either theory.

Double-blind studies — those in which neither the doctors nor the patients know who is receiving the vitamin and who is receiving a placebo — also have found that megadoses of the vitamin do not ease cancer symptoms.

There is some indication that while it is not an effective cold preventive, vitamin C may relieve cold symptoms somewhat due to a slight antihistaminic effect. However, the body is absolutely saturated with vitamin C at 100 milligrams a day, less than twice the RDA.

Extra vitamin C is excreted in the urine and high doses may contribute to kidney stones in those with a tendency toward developing them. High doses also may cause diarrhea and will play havoc with the glucose tests administered to diabetics.

VITAMIN B-COMPLEX: The eight B vitamins are found in yeast, meats, poultry, fish, whole-grain and enriched breads and cereals, many vegetables, milk products and eggs. The RDAs for the B vitamins range from less than 1 to 7 mg, and from 13 to 19 mg for niacin. No RDA has been set for biotin, which is made by intestinal bacteria and has an Estimated Safe and Adequate Dietary Intake of 100 to 200 mcg for adults.

Megadoses of vitamin B-complex have been touted as a treatment for premenstrual syndrome (PMS) and for anxiety. But no tests have proven either theory.

Such megadosing ideas are developed by taking the common symptoms of vitamin deficiency and turning them upside down, says Goldstein. In this case, a shortage of B vitamins can affect the nervous system, so vitamin B promotors hold that high doses will improve nervous system functioning.

Notes Goldstein, "If you're nervous, maybe you've got a lot of problems going on and taking the vitamins is not going to relieve the nervousness."

In fact, some cases of cumulative nerve ending damage have been reported in those taking large doses of B-6, the vitamin commonly recommended for PMS, says Goldstein.

VITAMIN E: Vitamin E is found in whole-grain cereals, lettuce and vegetable oils. The RDA is 8 to 10 mg.

Vitamin E is promoted in large doses to treat breast lumps and for external use in treating acne. The reasoning here is the same as that for the B vitamins, says Goldstein: the symptoms of vitamin E deficiency include skin conditions, which can be relieved by rubbing the vitamin directly on the skin.

But these uses also have yet to be upheld by controlled tests. And megadoses of vitamin E can cause headaches, nausea, muscle weakness, blurred vision and reduced sexual organ function.

VITAMIN A: Vitamin A can be found in sweet potatoes, milk, liver, eggs, butter, and green and yellow vegetables. The RDA for adults is 800 to 1,000 mcg.

High doses of vitamin A have also been prescribed for acne. Goldstein warns, however, that this fat-soluble vitamin is very toxic in high doses. It can cause a variety of problems, including retarded growth in children, drying and cracking of the skin, enlargement of the liver and spleen, and joint and bone pain.

Advertising portrays them as 'health insurance,' as a tool in fighting 'stress,' and as a cure for everything from terminal cancer to anxiety. But vitamins are no miracle drugs.

VITAMIN D: Vitamin D is found in fish liver oils, fortified milk, eggs, tuna salmon and sunlight. The RDA is 5 to 10 mg.

VITAMIN K: Vitamin K can be found in leafy vegetables. It is also made by intestinal bacteria. It has no RDA. The Estimated Safe and Adequate Dietary Intake for adults is 70 to 140 mcg. For children it is 15 to 100 mcg.

A word about minerals

Those who do have dietary deficiencies are more likely to be short on minerals than vitamins, says Goldstein. Women, in particular, often don't take in enough calcium or iron.

CALCIUM: Calcium is found in dairy products, sardines and salmon with bones, and vegetable greens such as collard, kale, mustard and turnip. Two glasses of milk or two servings of cheese or yogurt a day provides enough calcium for most adults, says Goldstein.

The body needs calcium throughout its lifespan, not just during childhood, she notes.

When women have an inadequate calcium intake when they reach menopause, the body may start taking calcium off the bone, where it is stored, which can result in osteoporosis, says Goldstein. She notes those who don't consume dairy products might want to take calcium supplements.

Calcium is best absorbed in the form of calcium carbonate, says Goldstein. She says dolomite should be avoided because it can sometimes be contaminated with lead.

IRON: Iron is found in dried fruits, dried beans and peas, red meat, liver and prune juice. The RDA is 5 to 10 mg for men and nonmenstruating women and 7 to 20 mg for menstruating women. Pregnant and lactating women need 20 to 48 mg, an amount that cannot be obtained from the diet and must be derived from iron supplements.

But Goldstein warns against treating yourself. There are several different types of iron deficiencies and anemias and simply adding iron supplements can actually be harmful in certain cases. In megadoses, iron can also cause constipation and the body will absorb the mineral over period of time, which can be dangerous.

Some do need supplements

While nutritionists warn against taking in more vitamins and minerals than are necessary, they note there are people who do need dietary supplements.

- Pregnant and lactating women need more iron than can be obtained from the diet. But these supplements should be taken only under a doctor's care, as incorrect dosages can cause problems for the fetus.
- Alcoholics often need to supplement their diet with B vitamins. Alcohol increases the body's requirement for certain B vitamins, mainly thiamin, needed to metabolize the alcohol. Because alcohol creates a feeling of fullness, those who drink a lot also may not eat enough to meet other vitamin needs, or may not pay attention to what they eat, Goldstein adds. She stresses this is not a problem for social drinkers, but only for very heavy drinkers.
- Chronic dieters — or anyone eating under 1200 calories a day — likely need vitamin supplements, as such diets are not balanced, says Goldstein.
- The elderly sometimes don't eat as much food as they used to, while their vitamin and mineral needs stay the same, sometimes creating a need for supplements.
- Smokers may also have a slightly increased need for vitamin C, although even their reduced body levels of the vitamin usually are still well above the RDA.
- Women on the pill occasionally need additional vitamin B-6, although the increased need is minimal and this contention is still controversial. Goldstein recommends having a doctor test the level of vitamin B-6 in the body and warns against self-medicating.
- Vegetarians, particularly women, may not get enough iron from their meatless diet and may need to eat more foods that are high in iron or take supplements.

Goldstein says that contrary to popular belief, children do not necessarily need vitamin and mineral supplements. Like adults, they can best meet their RDAs through a varied, balanced diet. She notes that children's chewable vitamins can be dangerous because they are so appealing that kids sometimes will eat them as candy.

Basic good eating still best

Because most vitamins and minerals are absorbed best in food, and because the body needs the carbohydrates, fats and fibers in food products to run smoothly, the best way to meet RDAs is still through the diet.

A balanced diet should include a variety foods from the four food groups — dairy products; meat, poultry and fish; fruits and vegetables; and grains.

The variety is important, in particular, says Goldstein, because not every food in a certain food group contains all the necessary vitamins and minerals.

The "quick-fix" appeal of vitamin supplements may be seductive — and the marketing strategies hard to resist — but, says Goldstein, no matter how you look at it staying healthy and energetic "really comes down to just eating right — to making sure you get a variety of food and a balance of food."

CABOT

We're on the move to Waltham. . .

Cabot Corporation is on the move to Waltham and you could be too! If you're energetic, motivated and talented, we need you at our corporate headquarters. Initially you will work in Boston, but soon will move to newly designed space at Bay Colony Corporate Cener in Waltham. We're a diversified Fortune 250 company that offers a stimulating climate in which to work. Opportunity for career growth and a strong salary and benefits package. If you are interested in any of these positions, send your resume or call the Assistant Personnel Manager at 423-6000 extension 3105.

Senior Benefits Specialist

If you are a detail-oriented organized individual, this job is for you. As a member of the Corporate Benefits Department, you will be responsible for the administration of pension benefits, payment of benefit plan premiums, the coordination and development of annual benefits statements and other benefits related projects. Since this job also involves heavy phone contact with personnel in our field offices, your excellent oral and written communication skills will be a plus. Benefits administration background and personal computer experience are preferred.

Personnel Secretary

We need a strong self-starter to provide secretarial support to a busy personnel executive. We need someone who has personnel secretarial experience, can work under deadlines, and juggle work assignments. You will develop salary budgets, administer the international service recognition program, and prepare various personnel reports. The skills we require for this job include excellent typing and a working knowledge of word processing equipment or personal computers. Shorthand or speedwriting is helpful.

First day of school

Rites of passage

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

The first day of school. These five words evoke anxieties in the young and old alike. Since the days of Shakespeare, when students went "toward school with heavy looks," society has placed pressure on families to repeat that loathsome call — "Go to school!" — to resistant sons and daughters.

Traditionally, the first day of school, in kindergarten or the first grade, has been viewed as a rite of passage when parents hand their children over to society, not only to be educated, but to learn how to handle themselves in the world.

Today, however, this first day of school is not the anxiety-ridden experience it once was. According to Dr. Joseph Massimo, Chief Psychologist for the Newton Public Schools, by the time they reach kindergarten, students have already had a number of "socialization" experiences in preschools.

For first graders, the first day of school is "even less of an issue," Massimo said. In addition to preschool, they have already been to kindergarten, they have sibl-

56 units planned for historic site

Proposal irks Upper Falls

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON UPPER FALLS — For the second time since June, Upper Falls residents are faced with a major development proposal that some say could exacerbate the village's traffic problems.

This plan also may have disturbing historical implications, some local historians and residents say. And they worry it could lessen the chances of a century-old home's receiving national historic recognition.

The proposal would place 56 apartments on an 11-acre Chestnut Street site once owned by Willard Marcy, a community leader in the second half of the 19th century.

The would-be developers — Morris Tarkinow and Harold Ellison of Met Realty Trust in Newton — are expected to ask the Board of Aldermen for a zone change to allow the multi-family proposal. They are scheduled to appear before the Land Use Committee in October, according to Howard Levine, their attorney.

Upper Falls residents will get their first look at the plans when the developer unveils them at the Upper Falls Depot Wednesday night.

According to Levine, what they will see is the developers' intention to preserve the main building, a three-story home built by Marcy in 1869. The building was recently nominated for inclusion in the National Registry of Historic Places, according to Barbara Thibault, chairman of the city's Historical Commission.

"It's going to be preserved, maintained, rehabbed and used as an amenity," the attorney said. "From the layman's view, it's in disrepair. It's going to be substantially rehabilitated."

Levine said architects plan to maintain the thick barrier of trees at the edge of the site so the view from outside would not change.

The proposed structure will be designed to look like a cross between a ski chalet and an apartment building, Levine said. "It isn't a square brick apartment building," he said. "The architects are having it fit into the contours of the site."

But present plans also call for the old Marcy home to be moved to another part of the property and that has Barbara Thibault, chairman of the city's Historic District Commission, concerned.

The National Park Services judges a building on a number of points, including its architecture and the preservation of its original setting, said Thibault.

Moving the Marcy home "diminishes its integrity," she said, adding, however, that she would like to look at the plans before making a judgment. "If they want a historical rehabilitation, they have to document its present location and conditions."

'People's Court,' Newton style

By Stephanie Simon
Correspondent

The men rose from the straight-backed wooden benches and faced each other, dislike and distrust showing in their narrowed eyes.

The ultimate confrontation, the moment of truth.

A painter, clad in white, paint-splotched pants and a tight blue t-shirt, glared at his adversary — a homeowner impeccably dressed in a pinstriped suit, blue button-down shirt and matching tie.

Sporting day-old stubble, the painter laughed insolently at the homeowner, who raised his voice, gestured with a pair of glasses and folded his arms defensively.

> 'I've become, more and more, a consumer-conscious judge. I find that people are getting shafted far too often.'
>
> Hon. Monte G. Basbas

The painter smiled incredulously as the homeowner began to talk. The homeowner listened stony-faced to the painter's tirade.

The burning question: Did the painter scrape, sand, and apply primer before beginning the final coat on the homeowner's house? Or did he skip the preliminary work and begin painting in the rain? At stake: $600.

Welcome to small claims court.

Behind the doors of the 'First Session' room in Newton District Court each Wednesday, arguments rage, tempers flare, anger rises.

Whose fault is it the artist's painting was ruined? Did the workman really use two different shades of limestone to complete the staircase?

While tension grows and questions are raised, plaintiffs and defendants wait for their turns to take the stand. They nervously shuffle papers, examine pictures, consult attorneys.

Did the framer really cut the artist's canvas to force it into a smaller frame? Did the contract

Bigelow insured

By Maureen Azzato

NEWTON CORNER — City officials are now saying Bigelow Junior High School, which last week was said to be dangerously uninsured, is more than adequately protected under the city's blanket $35 million insurance policy.

Last week, city Comptroller Lawrence Marino said the building was no longer covered because it is vacant. But after further investigation, Marino said Bigelow is well covered by the city's insurance policy.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann, at his weekly press conference, passed out a letter from the city's insurance advisor, which says, "The Bigelow Junior High School has been covered, is now covered, and will continue to be covered."

Marino had said he believed Bigelow was no longer covered because it was not being used. But, after checking with the Building Department and the insurance company, Marino said Bigelow — one of the city's most valuable pieces of property — is still protected because it is not considered a vacant building.

"If a building is vacant, it is technically uninsurable," he said. "Apparently the building is not 'vacant' as was believed earlier this week, even though it is unoccuppied.

"The building is used for storage and people are in and out of the place on a regular basis and most of the utilities are in working order," he said. "So far, the insurance inspectors are satisfied with the regular activity going on there."

Law's visit to Poland a balm for old wounds

NEWTON — Meeting with members of the dwindling Jewish community in Poland was "almost like visiting a museum as opposed to a vibrant community with a future," says Leonard Zakim, director of the New England Anti-Defamation League (ADL).

> 'Cardinal Law ... made it a priority to focus on the Catholic-Jewish aspect of the trip.'
>
> Leonard Zakim, ADL

Zakim, 32, an active member of Temple Emanuel on Ward Street, shared the bittersweet experiences of his "very intense" nine-day pilgrimage to Poland during an interview late last week.

He and three other Jews accompanied Bernard Cardinal Law and about 100 Boston area Catholics on the historic journey. It was Zakim's first trip to his family's homeland.

His description of Poland's Jewish community as "a museum" stems from the decimation of about 3.5 million Polish Jews during the systematic terror of Adolph Hitler's "final solution."

Now, only about 5,000 Jews, most of them elderly, remain in the predominantly Catholic, Communist-bloc nation.

"To be at my home in Newton 24 hours after standing in front of the crematorium at Auschwitz is an aspect of the trip I haven't even filtered through yet," said Zakim, who returned home last week.

He credited Law for the most concrete accomplishment of the trip — an agreement between the ADL and Catholic leaders in Poland to explore ways in which both groups can "develop a Catholic-Jewish dialogue there before the Jewish community passes away.

"Cardinal Law, from the outset of the trip, made it a priority to focus on the Catholic-Jewish aspect of the trip and to enable us, through his initiative, to have closed door meetings with Cardinal Glemp, of Warsaw, and

Her poetry intimates immortality

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

AUBURNDALE - The old cliche that says an artist has to suffer and starve in unappreciated anonymity does not bother the latest entry into the circle of successful poets in the Garden City.

While rejection, loneliness and apparently fruitless struggle can be an artist's constant companions, Sabrina Anderson says these are realities artists must face if they are committed to their work.

She was recently awarded the 1986 Golden Poet Award, which she says is one of the highest honors a poet can receive. She continually submits her work to local and national contests, and lately one of her poems captured someone's attention.

Her award winning poem, "When a Robin Sings" will be published in The World Poetry Anthology. It is the first of her poems to get published. Vincent Price will present the award to Sabrina this month when she and her mother make a special trip to Florida.

"I was very surprised that I won, but it confirmed and brought me one step closer to the future I've chosen," she says.

Sabrina is uncertain of where her writing will lead her, but she says there is comfort in knowing her work will carry on her name. Her writing, she says, is something nobody can take from her.

"When a person chooses the arts, they always have their work that will live on and carry on their name," she says. "While some people have children to carry on their name, I think an artist's work will live on forever. I'm trying to find out, sometimes painfully, what it takes to be a writer."

Through her poetry and a series of short stories in-the-making, Sabrina hopes her work will "stir" people's minds. Most of her poems are about nature, something she says people take for granted and do not take time to appreciate.

"I want people to feel good when they read my work. I would like to think I can inspire something inside them to respect nature more," she says.

She has been encouraged by her family since she was a child to pursue the arts. Her father was an artist and her mother is a dancer. Sabrina says she was "destined" to follow suit. Sabrina's mother says her daughter loved to "play act" and displayed incredible imagination and keen perception at a young age.

"Sabrina's father died when she was very young and I can remember, after he died, she wrote about death and what it meant to her," her mother says. "It was quite touching coming from an eight-year-old. I think her writing also consoled her feelings of grief and loss."

Sabrina said she always felt "different" from other children while she was growing up. She did not have many friends as an siblings and have made friends in the school, or they may live in a neighborhood where lots of children are entering school at the same time.

Still, entering elementary school for the first time can be harrowing, no matter how many schools have been attended in the past. According to Annie Hale, director of the Green Acres Day School in Waltham, parents are more anxious about sending their children off to elementary school, simply because it is an institution.

"(Going to elementary school) is a first step," said Massimo. Prior to that, they have been in "styrofoam (artificial) situations" in preschool.

Children begin making the adjustment to elementary school, and dealing with the prospect of separating further from their parents, when parents discuss going to school prior to the first day, said Massimo.

"The whole business of separation" — feeling competent, self-assured and independent as a human being separate from parents — "is a process that takes a while," he said. "Most children have already begun the process by the time they get to school."

But, more so than their children, parents are the ones who have a hard time with the first day of school, Massimo said.

"It's a mixture (between parents and kids)," he said, "but very often the first day of school brings to head a major problem of mastering the task of leaving off.

"Parents struggle with their own need for control and being needed," Massimo said. The more secure and confident the parents can be that their child(ren) will do a good job in school, the less anxious the youngster will be and the more quickly the student will adapt."

The first day of school in preschool can be much easier on children and parents than the first day of school in kindergarten or first grade.

According to Hale, preschools treat families on a more individual basis than do public schools. At Green Acres, an open house — where parents come and stay with their children — eases children and parents into the preschool world.

At Riverside Children's Center in Newton, parents are asked to stay with their child for a half hour before leaving on the first day. That time is lessened to five or 10 minutes on day two.

By the third day, "for the most part (the children) seem to have the idea of what's going on," said Nancy Rawlings, school director.

Still, said Hale, starting school at age 3 can be difficult. Parents find it hard to separate from their children because they think of them as babies.

And developmentally, the children do not have the concept of time a 5-year-old has. "So parents can't say they'll be coming back before lunch," said Hale.

Although attending elementary school is a major step, the adjustment period to kindergarten has been eased by preschools. According to Cabot School Principal Joe Gattuso, "We find the children, after an hour or two of the first day of school, are very well settled . . . They come and already have preschool experience. They've already been in groupings for extended periods of time."

Although students already know the buildings, and names and faces from kindergarten, the first day of first grade can still be anxiety-provoking for some students.

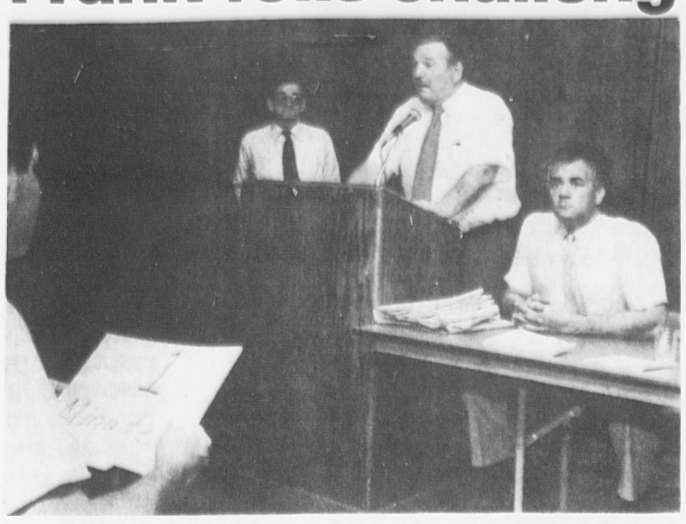

Vincent Simone, principal of Countryside elementary school, said first grade teachers address childrens' needs by decorating their classrooms, setting up bulletin boards and making sure each child has a locker.

"When kids come in and see their name on the board or on a locker and greeted personally, it gives them a sense of belonging as opposed to wondering if this place is for me," he said.

"Opening day of school is a lot like Broadway," he said. "It's a happy time."

Yet underneath all the hoopla, said Hale, attending elementary school is a "major deal for families, and kids in families feel that."

Frank foils challenges from the right

Rep. Barney Frank, seated, listens to challenger William Rosa as Charlie Feeley looks on. Art Illman photo

Staff Writer

NONANTUM — Last week's debate between U.S. Rep. Barney Frank and Democratic challenger William Rosa turned into a wild, one-sided mudslinging match as Rosa called for a moratorium on all American aid to foreign countries, specifically Israel, and accused U.S. Attorney William F. Weld of protecting banks that launder drug-running money.

Rosa, a 60-year-old retired Air Force pilot from Fall River, also admitted using Margaret Heckler's controversial 1982 campaign literature to bolster his candidacy.

The hour-long forum at Nonantum American Legion Post 440 proceeded normally at first, as Frank and Rosa addressed issues affecting the elderly, but moved off track at the midway mark after both men were asked to evaluate the recently proposed tax reform package.

During a rebuttal, Rosa said the overall tax burden could be reduced and other domestic problems solved with the money generated by "a moratorium on foreign aid, especially to Israel."

Frank ignored the comment and moved the discussion toward medical issues. In rebuttal, Rosa said the American Medical Association's (AMA) policies contribute to skyrocketing insurance costs.

Frank responded by pointing out that the AMA had financed Heckler's campaign against him in 1982 and that Rosa's supporters were handing out photocopies of Heckler literature to the approximately 50 elderly residents witnessing the debate.

The brochure, which was widely criticized four years ago as "a smear tactic" on Heckler's part, examines Frank's voting record during his eight years as a state representative from the area.

The literature accuses Frank of sponsoring an excise tax on hospital beds, voting for personal pay hikes, and supporting the legalization of marijuana and pornography, among other things.

When it was his turn, Rosa admitted he was recycling Heckler literature in the interest of saving money.

"This old bullet will kill just as well as a new one," Rosa said. "All I have to do is circulate it and, if enough people believe what's on this piece of paper, I'll be as good as in."

When the debate returned to the issue of foreign aid, Rosa said Israel was controlling the American government, accused the Israeli government of being a "destabilizing influence" in the Middle East and suggested that troops from the United Nations take over the country.

"We don't have any mutual interests with Israel right now," he said.

He noted that Rosa had omitted the disruptive influence exerted by Libya, Syria and Iran. "It's kind of hard to think how you would destabilize those countries," Frank added.

City gets $2.5 million payoff from lottery

NEWTON — The city will receive more than $2.5 million from the state Lottery Commission's annual distribution of aid to cities and towns for fiscal year 1986.

According to commission spokesman David Ellis, that figure is a combination of direct aid to Newton and the lottery's 10 percent contribution to the pool of money designated for state aid to Massachusetts' 351 cities and towns.

Ellis says the lottery contributed a little more than $1.3 million in direct aid for fiscal 1986. This represents revenue from the Instant Game, Weekly Game and Daily Numbers Game.

The balance, he says, is the percentage of money contributed to the state's general funds, which are divided among cities and towns according to various formulas. This revenue comes from Megabucks.

The commission announced the contributions yesterday, according to Ellis, to let people know "individuals are not the only winners.

"We are running an ad campaign to let people know that there is money going back to the community," he says. "Everyone knows we are doing well and there have been a lot of questions about returning some of the money to those communities."

Despite the announcement, Newton Mayor Theodore Mann says the state is not doing enough for the Garden City.

"We aren't getting sufficient local aid," he says. "This money has already been factored into our general funds, but it is still not sufficient to keep us ahead of inflation."

Mann adds that only this year's state surplus and the accompanying aid to cities and towns prevented Newton from raising property taxes.

"With cutbacks in federal aid," he says, "only money provided to us from the state surplus prevented the city from raising those taxes to meet rising consumer price indexes. If the state doesn't increase aid to Newton, I don't know what we will do in the future."

Trash tonnage to go down, but not costs

NEWTON — The city's strained solid waste disposal system will see a reduction of more than 35,000 tons of refuse this year, according to Public Works Commissioner James Hickey.

However, Hickey says the reduction will not do much to reduce rates the city will pay when its current waste disposal contract expires in 1988.

The reduction in tonnage, Hickey says, is due to Waltham no longer dumping at the Rumford Avenue Transfer-Haul station and the raising of dumping fees to commercial contractors.

"The biggest factor in the reduced tonnage is the fact that Waltham will no longer be dumping an annual 26,000 tons of solid waste here," Hickey says.

The other factor, he says, is that GSX, the city's current disposal contractor, increased the dumping fees of private contractors.

Schmidt seeks re-election

Middlesex County Commissioner Bill Schmidt, a Cambridge resident, has announced his candidacy for re-election to the three-member county board.

"I have worked hard as county comissioner to bring progress and performance to Middlesex County by cutting waste, instituting positive reforms and establishing needed new services on a regional basis," Schmidt said in announcing his bid.

McGrail says DA hiding $

Steve McGrail, candidate for Middlesex County District Attorney, says incumbent DA Scott Harshbarger has failed to disclose the use of more than $840,000 used to finance drug, rape and murder investigations.

Officials from state Auditor John Finnegan's office were unable to determine how the money was spent because personnel from Harshbarger's office described the records "as being locatable, but not available for audit review because of their confidential nature."

Harshbarger claims he exercised "professional prosecutorial and investigative discretion and privilege" by failing to disclose the funds, but McGrail asks, "What is Harshbarger trying to hide?"

Newton Centre home damaged in fire

NEWTON — A large three-story Newton Centre home was left seriously damaged late last week as a two-alarm fire ripped through the basement and first floor.

There were no injuries as the house, 150 Ridge Ave., was unoccupied. Fire officals and neighbors said the owners were away on vacation.

The cause of the blaze is still under investigation, though it is believed to have started in the basement, according to Asst. Fire Chief William Dwyer.

There was fire and water damage to the basement and first floors, as well as extensive smoke damage to the second and third floors, according to Dwyer. He would not estimate the cost of damages, but he said the fire was "quite costly."

Eight of the city's 11 fire companies responded to the alarms, and companies from Waltham, Watertown, Needham and Boston provided mutual aid to cover empty firehouses. It took 24 firefighters about half-an-hour to quell the blaze, though they were mopping up at the scene for more than two hours.

"We don't like to think of any fire as routine," said Dwyer. "But Newton is a city of dwellings and this was the type of fire that we often get. The firefighters acted quickly and we had it knocked down in about 30 to 40 minutes."

The Fire Department was made aware of the blaze by a neighbor who phoned in the alarm at 9:12 p.m.

Drug line set up

NEWTON - The Police Department Drug Investigation Unit (DIU) has installed a special confidential telephone line so the public can inform detectives of any information they might have concerning drug dealings in the city.

A 24-hour answering machine will take messages. Callers can either leave their names on the machine or leave an anonymous tip, he said. All calls will be confidential.

Turnout expected to be low for primary

NEWTON — Despite special voter registration hours Saturday, the local turnout for the upcoming state primary Sept. 16 will probably be low, according to city official charged with running elections.

Alan Licarie, executive director of the Election Commission, said two signs — the number of requests for absentee ballots and the number of people actually showing up at City Hall to register — point to a low turnout Sept. 16.

He estimated only 25 residents have asked for an absentee ballot so far. "At this point, I should have over 100," he said.

When the commission took its last count of registered voters in April, it found 44,132 residents had registered, he said. There were some 48,000 voters registered for the last election, a figure Licarie does not expect to reach.

Around 52,000 voters will normally register for a presidential election, he said.

He estimated 2,000 to 2,500 local residents will vote in the Republican portion of the primary and 10,000 to 12,000 in on the Democratic side.

Brian Yates, vice chairman of the city's Democratic Committee, urged residents to vote in the primary. Three state positions are open — lieutenant governor, attorney general and auditor — meaning this primary and the November election will help determine the shape of state government for a year, Yates said.

Take the law to heart.

Primaries of primary importance

As reporters in the Garden City write still more stories about how low the voter turnout is estimated for the September primary, we have to wonder if primary elections — the cornerstone of democracy — will ever get the attention they deserve.

Our election turnout stories, over the past several years, have been peppered regularly with phrases like "the lowest turnout in recent memory," "stayed away in droves," etc. We long to reverse the trend, but we share the city Election Commission's consternation when it comes to figuring out a way to do that.

The fact is that, given the tremendously skewed voter registration figures (It sometimes looks like the Republicans could hold their state convention in the cafeteria of City Hall.), the primary amounts to the election in many races. When the Democratic contender has been chosen, the final election is often just a walk-through.

With this in mind, we urge Newton voters to take time out on September 16 to vote in the primary. Those who fail to will have few choices left to make when the November election comes around.

Deficit concerns are still there

The principal business of government is more government. Away back, Parkinson's Law enunciated this. Bureaucracy feeds upon itself, first establishing a reason for existence and then striving to create more and more jobs. The result is a tremendous amount of energy being expended in Washington ... mountains of paper ... endless hearings and studies ... the never-ending flow of press releases ... pontification.

If the indictment seems too broad, so be it. Consider that America's largest employer is the federal government, even apart from the armed forces.

While the current tax overhaul going through Congress is a worthwhile document, likely to shift a substantial part of the burden away from the middle income people with a more narrow range of application, it really doesn't address the problems of a crisis nature. It offers no solution for the monstrous budget deficit. Nor does it take into the account the other nagging deficit in foreign trade.

Away back in 1964 when Barry Goldwater was offering his particular brand of Republican conservatisim, a fellow named Ronald Reagan authored a speech which dealt with tax reform. He is seeing that come to fruition as a high point in the second term of his Presidency. He rates credit for bringing it about. At the same time, it is not irrelevant to wonder whether benefits from change in the tax structure won't be wiped out by long-range liabilities springing from those deficits.

Tax reduction by the Reagan administration in 1981, a stimulant to the economy, set the course for the buildup to a $200 billion-plus budget shortfall and a doubling of the national debt. Social programs were eliminated or funding transferred in whole or part to the cities and towns without plunging into areas where the hatchet was really needed: luxury spending by the military establishment and the bureaucratic Frankenstein.

Any White House leader looks toward posterity as he advances new programs to solve old problems. So it has been with Mr. Reagan and there have been many successes. It is unfortunate his leadership hasn't gone all the way to restore fiscal stability. Down the road, those same middle income taxpayers getting advantages in 1987, if and when the tax bill becomes law, will be picking up the pieces.

Auditor often misunderstood

By George B. Merry

Few elective offices in Massachusetts are more important and yet perhaps less appreciated by voters than state auditor.

Many citizens know little about what it involves; they view it as just another post to be filled through the ballot.

Election campaigns for auditor tend to attract little more attention than the sound of an alarm clock atop Mt. Everest.

And this year, even though one of those rare occasions when the incumbent is not running again, certainly seems to be no exception.

Former state Rep. John J. Finnegan, the Boston Democrat who has held the auditorship since early 1981 when he was chosen by lawmaker colleagues to fill the then-recently-vacated post, is not seeking a second full four-year elective term. (He was chosen by lawmaker colleagues in 1981 to fill out an unfinished term.)

Thus far, the three Democrats vying for their party's nomination for the $60,000-a-year office have found their candidacies substantially overshadowed by primary contests for other elective seats, including lieutenant governor.

This has to be particularly frustrating for Maura Hennigan and Charles C. Yancey, who are challenging state Rep. A. Joseph DeNucci of Newton, the endorsee for state auditor by the May Democratic state preprimary convention.

The Republican intraparty competition for GOP nomination for the office, between state Reps. Andrew S. Natsios and William G. Robinson, is but slightly more visible, or at least audible.

Each of the candidates in both parties is claiming to be the one most experienced and best qualified to become auditor. But they could hardly do less and attempt to stage a credible campaign.

Representative Denucci, a former boxer, is in his fifth term in the legislature, where he serves as House chairman of the joint committee on Human Services and Elder Affairs.

Miss Hennigan, a teacher by profession, is a third-term Boston city councilor. She is the daughter of a former state senator who later was elected to posts in Boston and Suffolk County.

Mr. Yancey, a former administrator in the state Department of Communities and Development, is a second term Boston City councilor. If nominated, he would be the first black Democrat to run for a statewide office on a Massachusetts election ballot.

Representative Natsios, a sixth term state legislature from Holliston, is also state Republican chairman. He was endorsed for auditor by the GOP's April preprimary convention.

Representative Robinson, the House minority floor leader for the past eight years, is an 11-term legislator from Melrose.

Underlying the Natsios-Robinson contest is a fierce rivalry in which the state GOP chairman has been critical of his party's floor leader and the latter has been anything but enamored with his opponent's handling of party affairs.

Underlying the Natsios-Robinson contest is a fierce rivalry in which the state GOP chairman has been critical of his party's floor leader and the latter has been anything but enamored with his opponent's handling of party affairs.

Natsios clearly is relying heavily on his background in finance at a prominent Boston bank prior to becoming a legislature. Although perhaps no less conservative on state fiscal matters than his Republican primary foe, his efforts to steer the state GOP on a moderate course has displeased some of the more arch-conservative activists in the party.

Whichever of the two Republican candidates gains the nomination in the Sept. 16 primary faces a stiff, uphill battle to win the November election since Democrats outnumber members of the GOP by more than three to one on voter registration rolls in the commonwealth.

No Republican has been elected state auditor since 1938, nearly a half century ago.

Of the three would-be Democratic auditors, Mr. Denucci may be best known within his ranks, and he is generally considered the front-runner. He holds that what the office needs is not somebody with accounting skills but an ability to oversee a team of auditing specialists.

Mr. Yancey, who last spring barely made the required 15 percent Democratic convention delegate support to qualify to compete in the primary, is emphasizing his educational and professional background in the fields of finance and administration.

Miss Hennigan contends that her experience in helping handle Boston's more than $1 billion annual budget, is a particular plus for her.

Clearly none of the candidates in either party is an auditor by profession, or perhaps even close to it. Whoever is elected would have to rely on heavily on a staff of accountants and others in putting together the hundreds of reports annually regarding the use of public monies and operations of various public agencies.

In fairness to this crop of candidates, many of those who have held the auditor's chair in the past have been thin, if not void, in background in that direction. Instead, the chief experience they brought to the office was largely, if not entirely, political.

Not frequently, challengers with solid backgrounds in administration or finance, including at least a couple of certified public accountants, have been passed over by voters in favor of perhaps more familiar ballot names.

The electorate, faced with many offices to fill, cannot possibly know which candidate might be best qualified for state auditor. That may be why over half the states across the nation, including four in New England, do not elect their auditors through the ballot. Most entrust the selection to their legislature.

While perhaps less than ideal, that arrangement might be preferable here, especially if specific professional qualifications were spelled out in the state constitution so the job could not be handed to a political hack with friends in the legislature.

Since the auditor's office is supposed to be non-political, although that has not always been the way its reports have been handled, an even better idea might be to fill it with a professional in public finance, through the civil service process.

Toughened lemon law bearing fruit

By William G. Robinson

The recently beefed-up lemon law is now working to help consumers who find themselves stuck with new car lemons and nowhere to turn.

The Office of Consumer Affairs released figures this week on the success of the lemon law since it was toughened-up this year through legislation I filed, and the numbers show clearly that Massachusetts' consumers are seeing real results.

It was because of the failure of automobile manufacturers to abide by the original lemon law that I was forced to add an amendment providing a fine of $5,000 per day for a manufacturer who does not comply with the arbitration decision within 21 days.

It is unfortunate that in the past the lemon law did not provide the relief it was designed to provide, but it seems that if manufacturers did not want to deal it was designed to providem but it seems that if manufacturers did not want to deal in good faith then, the threat of stiff fines has forced them to do so now.

Chrysler recently awarded Maureen Radzikowski of Lynn more than $14,000 after she went through the arbitration process as a result of recurring engine problems with her 1986 van. An' while she admitted there was a good deal of paperwork and documentation required, Ms. Radzikowski said that it was because of the new lemon law that she got her cash settlement.

David McQueen of Worcester was in the process of trying to reach an agreement with Ford over his 1985 Ranger under the old lemon law and was finding it difficult to elicit any concrete results; the situation rapidly changed, however, with the enactment of the new amendment. "There was never any hassle after that," he said.

One measure implemented this year that does not seem to be so successful, though, is the affixing of stickers in new car windows notifying buyers of their lemon law rights. The Office of Consumer Affairs has stressed that dealers not complying with this regulation could be subject to a $5,000 fine.

The message to consumers, auto manufacturers and dealer is clear: Massachusetts' tough, new lemon law does work and will be strictly enforced.

(William G. Robinson is the House Republican Leader.)

Schools expand computers

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON - The School Department has suffered setbacks this year with declining enrollment, which resulted in the closing of Bigelow Junior High School. Despite the adversity, the schools have been able to maintain their standards and add some new curriculum into their program.

The biggest curriculum change school officials anticipate this year is the increased use of computers in the classroom. The schools are waiting for the Board of Aldermen to approve a $1 million proposal to fund the first phase of a two-year program to expand computer literacy in the schools.

According to Superintendent John Strand, program approval will triple the number of computers presently in the schools. Strand said he anticipates that, within two years, students in all schools and grades will be using computers in various areas of study.

The focus of the program is to use computers to enhance teaching in all subject areas, not strictly computer programming courses. If the aldermen approve the latest computer proposal, he said the money will be spent on computer software and hardware and on further teacher training in computer applications.

While computers have been in place in the schools for some time, secondary school principals are anxious to see the system upgraded and expanded.

"This would give all departments more access to the computers, aside from giving our computer classes more capabilities," Newton South High School Principal Ernest Van Seasholes said. "I hope the proposal will go through soon because I think it will be an exciting and challenging addition to the curriculum."

For Newton North High School, approval of the computer proposal would mean entire classes could use the facilities at once, according to principal Marya Levenson. There are only two computers presently in the school library.

"Computers have been experimental in the curriculum up until now," she said. "If the funding is approved we would have 15 computers in the library available to most of our teachers for instruction."

Expanded computerization will also facilitate the school's attendence system, Levenson said. Students will be less likely to cut classes, she added.

"We're hoping the computers will be in place by October. I hope this will be a more effective way to deal with attendance."

Both Seasholes and Levenson said declining enrollment will plague the high schools in the coming five years, but this year's decline has not significantly affected the range of programs offered. The estimated projected enrollment for this year is 9,482, down 218 from last year, according to school officials.

"We're doing the best we can to creatively deal with the anticipated enrollment decline," Levenson said. "I think the school system has devised some wonderful plans to ensure educational excellence doesn't suffer as a result. As our student population gets smaller, it will be increasingly difficult to offer the range of programs we now have."

At Newton North, some business administration and German courses have been dropped, but a Chinese language and culture course has been added. This month, as part of the new emphasis on Chinese study, seven high school students have been selected to go to China to study for six months on a locally initiated exchange program. According to Strand, this is the first exchange of its kind in the nation.

"It will be a fantastic experience for these students, who will be living with Chinese families while they are abroad," Strand said. "It will be a tremendous cultural change for them and they will return with so much to share with the rest of our student body and faculty."

Aside from specific curriculum changes, the School Committee and School Department officials will consider whether a change to a middle school system which groups grades six, seven and eight together in one building. The present junior high school system houses only grades seven and eight.

The reason such a sytem would be considered is that elementary school enrollment is predicted to rise in coming years. In the spring, School Committee members discussed the feasibility of making additions on some elementary school buildings to accomodate the future space needs. Furthermore, several committee members would like to see the present 22:1 student-teacher ratio reduced, which would create a need for more classrooms.

Rather than making new additions to elementary school buildings, the middle school system could be a more viable solution, according to Strand. Moving the sixth grade to the junior high schools could free up space at the elementary schools.

A system change of this sort will require extensive study by the School Committee and School Department before it could go into place, he added. The School Committee decided to close Bigelow Junior High School this year and recommended the city not sell the building in case the schools need to reopen it in the future. The alderman have agreed to lease the building for five years.

Most of the Bigelow faculty have been relocated to other schools in the interim. Only one teacher was dismissed this year as a result of the school closing and declining enrollment.

New plans worry Upper Falls

the Upper Falls Historic District Commission, has the same worry.

"Yes, I think moving the house and building units is going to detract from the strength of the application," said Fisher.

He also fears the 56 housing units would bring too much traffic to the area, a view shared by Brian Yates, president of the Upper Falls Community Development Corporation.

Residents have long complained that Upper Falls streets are jammed with cars seeking to reach Route 9 or Route 128 without using traffic-jammed Needham Street. Some have said they have trouble getting out of their own driveways at rush hours.

The area is also too dangerous for the additional vehicles the proposal would put on Chestnut Street, Yates said. The Marcy Estate sits near a bend in the street that partially blocks drivers' vision and they would have difficulty seeing cars exiting the proposed development, Yates said.

He recalled three or four serious accidents in the past few years there, including one fatality and another incident in which a car demolished a stone wall.

"I just have an overwhelming concern that the substance of this proposal is not valid," said Yates. "It's hazardous now and it's going to be a lot worse."

Levine said it was too soon to comment on the traffic impact. Both the developers and the city's Planning Department will be studying the issue. "I don't know if it's going to have any impact," he said.

Whether it will or not, the Met Realty proposal has stirred the fears of traffic- and development-weary Upper Falls residents for the second time since June.

Developer Jack Antaramian two months ago unveiled plans to convert the vacant Stowe-Woodward bowling ball factory either into office space, residences or a combination of the two. He is now waiting for neighbors to tell him which they prefer for the site, located at the corner of Needham and Oak streets.

The Antarmaian proposal at least has the advantage of replacing what was an obnoxious manufacturing use with a less offensive one, Yates said.

But the proposed Marcy Estate development has no such advantage and could end up harming a treasure of Upper Falls history, he said.

Three generations of Marcys lived there, beginning with Willard and his wife, Elizabeth, the daughter of Otis Petee. It was Petee who, as president of the Charles River Railroad, stimulated commercial activity in the area by extending rail lines from Boston to Upper Falls.

Records at the Jackson Homestead show Marcy was a major civic leader in the second half of the 19th century, and served as a selectman, assessor, and fire chief. He served in the state House of Representatives in 1885 and 1886.

Marcy died in 1890 and his wife left the estate to her three children when she passed away in 1914. George, one of the children, purchased the estate at an auction and lived there with his wife and eight children.

For much of its history, the 11-acre site was a farm for poultry, dairy products and grain. Esther Marcy, daughter of George, operated the Marcy Farm Candy Company from there, according to her brother, Gilbert, now a Newton Highlands resident.

The estate left the hands of the Marcy family this January when radio station WHDH purchased the property. Since 1954, the station has rented space there for its transmission tower.

Opera auditions to be held in September

NEWTON — Auditions will be held Sept. 8, 11 and 14 at 21 Manet Circle, Chestnut Hill, for the 1986/87 season of the Newton Opera Workshop. A full production of Don Giovanni is planned for June 1987 and opera scenes for December 1986. Classes are on Saturday afternoon at the All Newton Music School, 321 Chestnut Street, West Newton.

The fee is $295 per semester.

The Newton Opera Workshop is part of the All Newton Music School, a non-profit community music school.

For information and audition appointment, call Hanni Myers at 527-3320, or William Merrill at 242-9069.

The Newton Opera Workshop is part of the All Newton Music School. ANMS is a community music school which is in its 75th Anniversary Year and dedicated to spreading the joy of music.

With 90 faculty members and over 1600 students the ANMS has an extended communty including Newton, Boston and over 46 surrounding towns. It is funded in part by the Mass. Council on the Arts and Humanities, a state agency, and the Newton Arts Lottery Council.

Hotel awarded by Auto Association

NEWTON — The Newton Marriott has been selected by the American Automobile Association for the 1986 Four-Diamond Award.

According to Dwight L. Conant, the general manager of the Massachusetts Chapter of AAA, "The Four-Diamond rating is awarded only to those exceptional properties which significantly exceeded AAA requirements in most physical and operational categories."

Bigelow insured

The city recently bought a $35 million insurance policy that has a $250,000 deductible, Marino said.

According to Mann, municipalities are having difficulty finding insurance companies to protect public buildings. Given the market, the city was compelled to accept this high deductible, he added.

"You can't protect everything 100 percent," Mann said. "Homes get broken into. Even Brinks was broken into. We've gone beyond what a reasonable, prudent person would do. Frankly, that's the best test."

The School Committee voted last year to close Bigelow because of declining enrollment. The committee turned it over to the city Aug 15. The Board of Alderman had decided to retain the surplus building under city ownership in case it is needed in the future.

Despite the clarification of Bigelow's insurance status, Alderman Paul Coletti, chairman of the Finance Committee, is still concerned about the security of the building.

"We have a prospective lessee who hopefully will be in the building as early as September," Coletti said. "Until then, the Building Department plans to staff the building and meet the minimum requirements for what constitutes an active building."

The Building Department has received bids for 24-hour security protection, Coletti said. He will not be satisfied, he added, until it is installed and operational.

Coletti said he spoke with both Mann and Building Commissioner James Cameron to clarify the building's status.

"At Monday night's board meeting I wanted to make sure it is perfectly clear the building is 100 percent protected and insured," Coletti said. "Not for one minute do I want that building to be vacant. If a building is vacated and closed, the process to reopen it is very slow."

Adolescent program is awarded grant

NEWTON — Northeastern Family Institute-Keystone Adolescent Program in Newton has recently received a grant from the Junior League of Boston.

This program aides the decrease or elimination of the need for psychiatric hospitalization, and the preparation of adolescents to return home or to a less restrictive setting.

The Junior League of Boston is a volunteer, non-profit organization in its 80th year. While the League's primary emphasis will continue to be placed on training effective volunteers through community service; the Enabling Fund grants will expand the League's base of support for the non-profit agencies serving the greater Boston community.

Poet strives for perfection

adolescent but she has learned to use her "uniqueness" to her advantage.

"There weren't many kids who could relate to me. I was extremely shy as a little girl, but deep down inside I think I was always a ham. I loved to be the center of attention," she says.

Aside from her writing, Sabrina, who would not reveal her age because it is a "bad business practice", also teaches modern dance at her mother's studio, does occasional modeling and freelances as a make-up artist for several local photographers.

"I've never told anyone how old I am. A lady should never tell her age until she is 80-years-old," she says. "Then, if she has kept herself the way a lady should, she can deduct 20 years from her age and get away with it. So, when I tell you I'm 60, you'll know how old I am."

Although her talents are diverse, she says writing is her focus. Sabrina's talent was noticed by a junior high school teacher who told her she would make a name for herself someday.

"I still remember her words to this day," she says. "I can still hear her telling me that someday my books and poetry would be sold in stores all over the world. I'd like to think that will happen in my lifetime."

Although her teacher's praise built up her confidence and made her realize her talent, Sabrina says she is a perfectionist, which can be an asset. It can also be her worst enemy. It can cramp her creativity.

"I'm not scared of criticism because it's the only way to learn," she says. "If people continually praise you, it's very easy to stay at the same level without improving. You always have to strive for perfection, even though an artist is never completely satisfied with his work."

Writing is not a daily discipline for Sabrina. Often, days will go by before she will pick up a pen and put her thoughts on paper.

"Many authors say it's important to write daily as an exercise. It doesn't work that way for me," she says. "I have to be inspired. I can only write when I feel something needs to be said."

Her long-term goal is to write a book someday about what she envisions will exist on earth after WW III. There will be carnage and destruction, but she says it will not mark the end of the world.

"I think it will be a sad day if it ever comes to be, but it won't be the end," she says. "I think God loves what he created too much to destroy it all."

Chorale to perform

NEWTON — The Newton Chorale, under the direction of Mrs. Selma Seligman, will open the 1986-1987 season by presenting a program at a meeting of the Golden Group at Temple Emeth in Brookline on Thursday, Sept. 11 at 1:30 p.m.

Their "Musical Interlude" will include show tunes, operatic aria and Israeli and Jewish folk songs.

The Chorale is composed of a group of dedicated musical women who have performed for many private and organizational functions. Their programs have taken them not only throughout the Boston area but also to the North Shore, the South Shore, etc. All funds raised are allocated to musical scholarships.

Anyone interested in programs or women wishing to sing can reach Mrs. Seligman at 527-8350 or Mrs. Lillian Gussenoff at 566-1632.

Newton's 'People's Court'

specify the kind of limestone to be used?

As the questions continue, accusations and denials fly. A casual visitor stepping into the room might think he had wandered into a taping session of "The People's Court."

But Presiding Justice Monte G. Basbas sits behind the bench, not Judge Wapner. This melodrama is real — the people are fighting for their dollars, fighting for their honor, fighting for a principle.

Basbas has been a judge in Newton District Court for 15 years, and he says that small claims cases are the "most difficult of all.

"People argue on the basis of principle alone," he says. "They don't want to settle it among themselves. A doctor may sit in court all day, missing work, to get a $50 fee because of the principle involved. Emotions run wild — people want to fight and then they want a decision."

Small claims cases involve suits for less than $1500. This limit does not apply to motor vehicle accidents. If a car is wrecked, the plaintiff may sue in small claims court for the total value of the car.

Despite the relatively small amount of money involved, Basbas believes small claims court to be "extremely important. It allows an individual to come into court without a lawyer and to settle a small problem," he explains.

Because of a recent Supreme Court decision, says Basbas, this aspect of the small claims court may be in jeopardy. The ruling allows any person involved in a small claims case to petition the court to move the case to the civil list. Most petitions succeed, says Basbas.

"If a company which has a lawyer on retainer is getting sued left and right, they will probably move every case from small claims to the civil list," says Basbas, explaining the effect of the new ruling. "Then the defendent will have to hire a lawyer, and most likely the lawyer's fee will exceed the amount of money being sued for. It defeats the purpose of small claims."

Most small claims cases deal with the complaints, charges, and countercharges arising from sales. While the issues may seem trivial, the plaintiffs — like the teenager whose "new" car muffler is held together by wire coathangers or the woman whose "expertly installed" wallpaper is lumpy — want to see justice and they want to be compensated for their losses.

"I've become, more and more, a consumer-conscious judge," says Basbas. "I find that people are getting shafted far too often."

On the other hand, says Basbas, some plaintiffs "become vindictive. They want to use the courts to harass people. It happens often enough in small claims court," he adds.

As presiding justice, Basbas not only listens to testimony, examines evidence, and makes decisions, but he keeps order in the court as well.

Often, the exchanges between defendant and plaintiff become quite heated, as it did in one of last Wednesday's cases:

"You're a liar!"

"You're the liar!"

"The job was finished!

"Not the way I wanted it!"

If testimony threatens to turn into debate, Basbas steps in, as he did on Wednesday. ("If you want to fight, you do it outside, not in the courtroom.") He may also interfere to stop testimony which has become repetitive.

"Sometimes I have to sit there and bite my tongue. I don't want to cut anyone off, but I have to stop them sometime," he says. "After a while, you begin to wear on it, and you need to use as much patience as you can. Some people have a tendency to go off the deep end," says Basbas.

Although the small claims court may be just one cog in the wheel of justice, "It serves an important purpose," says Gloria Simms of Dorchester, who had a case in court last week.

"It's good that you don't have to go to a bigger court with a small problem like this."

Simms was prosecuting a mechanic who allegedly failed to complete work on her car. The mechanic did not appear on the scheduled trial date; on Wednesday he appealed to the judge to override the default issue when he did not show the first time. By lunch, Simms had been waiting four hours for the decision.

"That's the bad part," she said, checking her watch again. "We've been sitting here since 9:30 this morning. The judge should make a decision."

By 3:30 p.m., another small claims Wednesday was over. Everyone left the 'First Sessions' room except Basbas, who sat down in his adjoining study. As he perused his case notes, he smiled. "This is not as enjoyable as Judge Wapner," he said.

Renewed dialogue in Poland

Cardinal Macharski, of Krakow," Zakim said.

"There is now a commitment on the part of both cardinals to work with the ADL to develop and plan a meeting in Poland on this issue. It gives us something to look at for the future.

"Certainly, there's a lot that needs to be done, but I think the willingness of both cardinals to commit themselves to that idea is, in itself, a dialogue that's important not only in Poland, but in Europe as well," Zakim said.

"It would not have happened without Cardinal Law's initiation of the meeting. He put himself out on a limb because he believes in it," he added.

Zakim said the "history of anti-Semitism is one which the Polish people need to acknowledge if their own human rights situation is to be understood."

Numerous steps toward reaching that understanding occurred during the pilgrimage.

Cardinals Law and Macharaski visited the Remu Synagogue in Krakow and the Jewish museum there — "a very important gesture on the part of both cardinals to reach out to the Jewish community in Poland and to express to them their solidarity," Zakim said.

"Both cardinals said prayers in the synagogue in which they specifically noted the attempts by Hitler to exterminate the Jews in his 'final solution,' and both vowed to play a very upfront and substantive role in teaching about that terrible experience," he added.

In addition to his meetings with Poland's few remaining Jewish leaders, Zakim accompanied Law and Glemp on a visit to the site of the Warsaw ghetto uprising in 1943.

He said his most emotional experience occured at the end of the pilgrimage during a visit to Auschwitz with Law and Cardinal Wetter, of Munich. Like the others, Wetter had never been to the infamous death camp before.

"In view of all the things we saw, it was appropriate to end the trip at Auschwitz," Zakim recalled.

"To be where the worst possible extension of prejudice ever took place; to walk among the ashes of Auschwitz and visit other death camps, like Treblinka, really gave me a better sense of the importance all of us must observe in terms of dealing with anti-Semitism and bigotry today," he said.

"It also increased our sense of what could have been had more people stood up to the Nazis in Poland and elsewhere throughout Europe. The record of indifference in the face of the attempt to exterminate the Jews is a very horrible one," Zakim said.

It was there, in the camp where 3 million Jews were exterminated over a five-year period, that Zakim recited the Kaddish — the Jewish memorial prayer for the dead.

He was assisted by three Catholic cardinals, numerous bishops and priests, Kitty Dukakis, State Senate President William Bulger and dozens of Catholic pilgrims.

Another emotional element of the trip occurred when Zakim returned to the tiny Polish village where his grandparents once lived. They fled to America at the turn of the century during a wave of "pogroms" — organized programs designed to persecute Jews.

The Nazi Army destroyed the entire village during World War II, killing most of the inhabitants and leaving the remainder to starve.

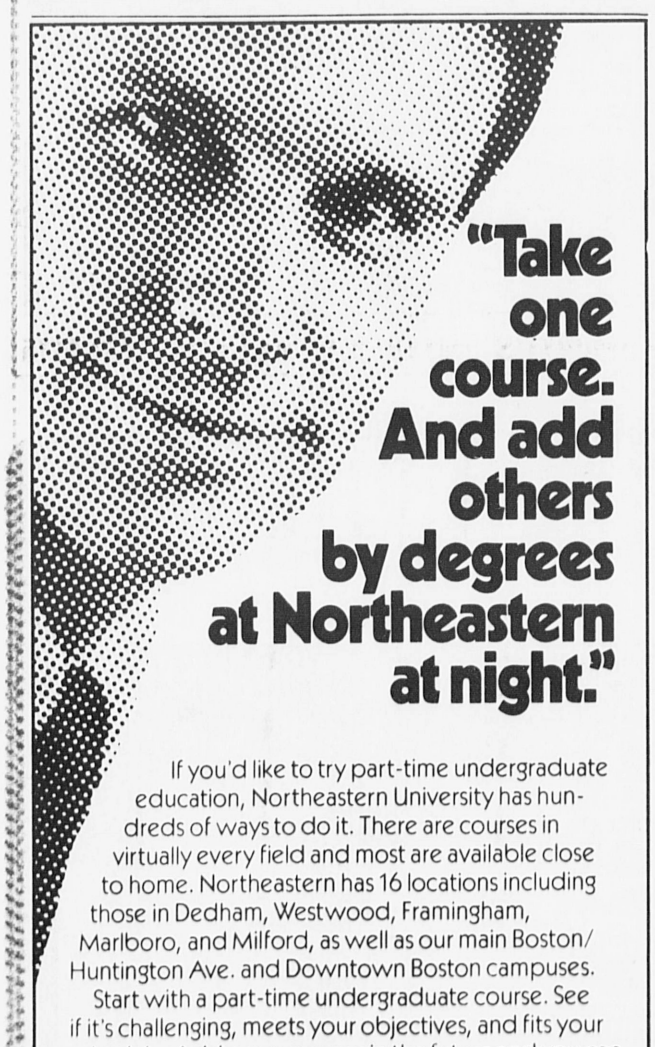

"My great-grandmother had 18 children. As far as we know, they didn't survive," Zakim said.

"I felt a very direct link to my grandparents and a very profound sense of awareness of the courage that they must have had to leave that country. It gave me a deeper sense of gratitude," he added. "There's no question that neither my grandparents nor my parents would have survived."

Police, court briefs

Woman scares off burglar

NEWTON — A woman may have scared off a potential thief when she came home to her Pillion Court home Saturday morning. Police said the woman walked in the back door and went directly to the phone and called a friend.

While she was on the phone, she heard footsteps on the roof above the kitchen. She went upstairs and found a bedroom window, with access to the roof, had been raised. Nothing appeared to be missing from the home, said police.

$220 cash stolen out of purse

NEWTON — Someone stole $220 in cash out of a purse left in a second floor office at 791 Beacon St., according to a report received by police Saturday morning.

Car stolen near Newton Centre

NEWTON — A 1980 Oldsmobile parked on Beacon Street near Newton Centre Square was stolen Saturday afternoon, said police.

Stereo stolen out of Porsche

NEWTON — A white 1984 Porsche parked in a lot off Needham Street Saturday afternoon was broken into by smashing a window, said police. The thief stole a Revox stereo component.

Purse and $200 cash is stolen

NEWTON — A pocketbook which was hanging on a hook near the open front door of an Elm Street apartment was stolen Saturday between 3 and 6 p.m., according to police. The pocketbook contained $200 in cash.

Car stolen from Marriott lot

AUBURNDALE - A 1979 Audi, owned by a Rhode Island resident, was stolen from the Marriott Hotel parking lot on Commonwealth Avenue last Tuesday night, police said.

Detector lifted from Saab

CHESTNUT HILL - A $300 Passport radar detector was stolen from a 1983 Saab while it was parked at the Chestnut Hill Mall last Tuesday, police said. Entrance was reportedly gained by breaking the passenger window.

Thieves break into piggy bank

LOWER FALLS - A Concord Street home was broken into and ransacked last Tuesday and thieves apparently only stole an undetermined amount of money from a young girl's piggy bank, police said. Entrance was reportedly gained by removing a screen from an unlocked window.

Toyota stolen from parking lot

NEWTON — A 1984 Toyota Cressida in a parking lot on Needham Street was stolen last Wednesday between 8:30 a.m. and 3 p.m., said police. The car was owned by a Needham resident.

Detector taken from Porsche

NEWTON — A Passport radar detector worth $250 was stolen out of a 1985 Porsche 944 parked on Windsor Road, according to a police report received last Wednesday. The thief tossed a large rock through the passenger window in order to get into the car.

Thief gets away with stereo

NEWTON — A home on Lexington Street was reportedly broken into last Wednesday between 10 a.m. and 5:45 p.m. Police said the thief took out a screen and climbed through a first floor window. He got away with a Pioneer stereo unit worth $800.

Resident's Camaro stolen

NEWTON — A 1986 Chevrolet Camaro was stolen out of the parking garage at the Chestnut Hill Mall last Wednesday between 5:30 and 7:30 p.m., said police. The car was owned by a Newton resident.

Radar detector stolen Friday

NEWTON — A Passport radar detector was stolen out of a 1984 Ford Mustang parked in a driveway on Old Farm Road Friday night. A neighbor told police he saw a youth get out of a dark-colored Buick or Oldsmobile and walk up to the Mustang, then run back to the dark car. The theft was reported to police around midnight Friday.

Television store robbed

NEWTON — Someone broke into Stan's TV Sales and Service on Lexington Street early Saturday morning by smashing the front door, according to reports. Police said the thief got away with four Zenith video cassette recorders and a used Zenith 19-inch television.

Car thefts in Chestnut Hill area

NEWTON — A Heidelberg AM-FM cassette deck worth $300 was stolen out of car parked outside the Chestnut Hill Mall Saturday, according to a report received by police shortly before 1 p.m. The thief smashed the car's vent window in order to get inside.

Several hours later, at the Chestnut Hill Shopping Center, a car was broken into and 15 cassette tapes were stolen. The dashboard also was damaged, but the thief apparently was unable to remove the stereo.

Around 8 p.m. a Brewster man reported the theft of his 1980 Oldsmobile 98 from the upper lot of the Chestnut Hill Mall.

Cars in that area also were targets of thieves on Friday. At 2:50 p.m. an Arlington man reported the theft of his AM-FM cassette player, worth $170, from his 1984 Volkswagen Jetta, which was parked across the street near the Stop & Shop. The car's vent window had been smashed.

Less than an hour later a local woman reported that her 1984 Toyota Cressida was stolen from lot outside Boomingdale's.

Officer may go to traffic class in Chicago

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Police officer Stephen Walsh will be going back to school this fall if Chief William Quinn has any say in the matter.

Quinn Monday night received approval from two aldermanic committees for a $5,000 appropriation that will allow traffic officer Walsh to attend a seven-week training course at Northwestern University's Traffic Institute (NUTI).

The chief said the training will enable Walsh to become the city's first traffic accident reconstruction officer.

"This program is the FBI institute of traffic schools," Quinn said. "There is no other school that will give Walsh the training he will receive at Northwestern."

The NUTI program, he added, will give Walsh the skill to arrive at an accident scene and reconstruct the automobiles' speed and other key factors involved.

"No one is qualified to do that now," Quinn said. "When Walsh gets back, he will be able to reconstruct an accident and find out who is to blame and if there are any violations involved."

In addition to reconstructing accidents, Quinn said the program will benefit the city by allowing officials to determine if poorly designed intersections and other road designs contributed to the accident.

"With this skill, we will be able to determine if intersections should be redesigned to avoid accidents in the future," he said. "This will be an immeasurable benefit to the city."

Both the Finance and Public Safety Committees approved Quinn's request last night.

If approved by the Board of Aldermen, Walsh will leave for Chicago and start classes Sept. 8. The classes will cover accident scene investigation, technical accident investigation, vehicle dynamics and traffic accident reconstruction.

Injured in accident

WESTWOOD — A West Newton woman suffered shoulder and rib injuries last week in a multiple-car accident on Route 128 on the Westwood-Dedham line.

Mary Hasenfus, 63, of 15 Ardmose Road in West Newton, was treated at Norwood Hospital and released following the 7:12 p.m. accident.

According to Lt. William Scoble of the Westwood Fire Department, the accident occurred on Route 128 south between a rest area and the University Avenue exit. That is on the Dedham-Westwood line.

Both fire officials and State Police said several vehicles were involved in the accident.

Chatham Properties open in Newtonville

NEWTON — Michael Iodice, president of Chatham Development Co., Inc., a real estate development/management firm, announced the inception of his new division, Chatham Properties, Inc. Chatham Properties is a full service real estate company involved in the sale and leasing of commercial and residential properties.

Already in the real estate business for 25 years, Chatham Development is familiar with all aspects of industry. According to Iodice, Chatham Properties wants to employ a diverse group of professional brokers who have a complete knowledge of the real estate profession, with an aggressive "get it done now" attitude.

The Chatham Companies will be located in their newly-constructed office building at 29 Crafts St. in Newtonville.

Nursing agency expands services

NEWTON — Special Care Nursing Service, a 10-year-old home health agency, has expanded its services to the Newton area with the opening of a branch office in the Atrium Building on 1509 Hancock St. in Quincy. It is the 11th location for Special Care Nursing, which is affiliated with the nationally-known New England Rehabilitation Hospital in Woburn.

The demand for quality home health services has been steadily increasing due to several factors: pressures on hospitals for the cost containment resulting in limited hospital admissions and faster discharges; desire of individuals to remain as independent as possible by seeking alternatives to institutional care.

Special Care Nursing offers services from brief visits to 24 hours a day, 7 days a week including Visiting Nurses, home health aides, homemakers, elder care, baby/child care, sitter care, handicap respite care, live-in companions, overnight monitoring, escort transportation, errand assistance, care call check-in, and mini-care visits. It also offers physical therapy, occupational therapy, and speech therapy services.

Teen and preteen clothes shop opens

NEWTON — Daydreamer, a new boutique for pre-teen, teen and junior girls, opened at 212 Sumner St., Newton Centre, on Aug. 25.

"Girls' clothing is more exciting than ever," said Karen Stein, owner. "The colors are vibrant, the styles are innovative and the look is definitely 'today.' We have a collection that is fun to shop for and fun to wear."

Daydreamer is open Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. The shop is located at 212 Sumner St., Newton Centre (across from the Post Office), 964-4363. The Newton Centre MBTA station is a few blocks away.

Social Security is a bonus

By Neville Frankel

Dear Mr. Frankel:
I'm 40 and have been contributing to Social Security for some years. I wonder how accurate the predictions are about the system's eventual bankruptcy. As I plan and invest for the future, should I be including Social Security payments as part of my projected income?
J.C. Quincy

Dear J.C.:
The prudent way to see Social Security is as a non-deductible tax, and to consider any retirement benefits a bonus.

It's a substantial bonus, too; a person retiring this year, after making maximum contributions for 45 years, will have paid in $27,000. The maximum monthly benefit is currently $760.20- which means that he would receive his entire contribution back in 3 years. And since actuarial tables allow for 15 years of collecting, our hypothetical person will take in five times as much as he has contributed.

Some forecasts predict bankruptcy by the year 2025 — but we have heard such predictions before, generally prior to dramatic rate increases. These increases began in the mid 70's, when Social Security started paying out more than it was taking in. Ten years ago, we were taxed at a maximum of $895 a year — the top contribution is now more than three times that amount.

Congress has made some changes to improve the system, for example:

- The age for full retirement will gradually increase to age 67; early retirement benefits will decrease.

- Currently, it takes 8.5 years to become fully insured for retirement benefits. By 1990, it will take 10 years.

- High income beneficiaries of Social Security are taxed on their benefits (income calculations include interest from tax-free investments).

The long term outlook is less than positive, and part of the reason is sheer numbers. While today's retirees have 3.4 workers toiling to fund their monthly check, today's young worker will have only two.

The solution is to find all pension plans available to you, and to check upon the government from time to time to ensure that your Social Security account is being correctly funded. This should be done every 3 years, since only the last 3 years are broken out separately. Everything earned prior to that is lumped together on the report you will receive from Social Security. To check your account, pick up a form from your local Social Security office.

FAN appoints director

NEWTON — Diane Harrison Yorra and Rebecca Leviss Dwyer have been appointed executive director and associate director, respectively, of the Fund for the Arts in Newton (FAN).

FAN is comprised of seven affiliate organizations including the Newton Art Association, Newton Arts Center, Newton Choral Society, Newton Country Players, Newton Cultural Affairs Inc., Newton Symphony Orchestra and Newton Television Foundation.

Yorra, executive director, grew up in Texas, New York and California, with parents involved in music and theater.

She pursued the arts educationally through graduate school and later took on the role of manager and producer by creating and running a summer-long performing arts festival in the San Fransisco area.

Yorra served for nearly four years as director of special fund raising at the San Fransisco Opera. In Massachusetts she has produced and managed several theater presentations and tours. Presently she serves as board member on several arts groups and foundations in Massachusetts.

Dwyer is a professional visual and arts administrator who has worked for several non-profit arts organizations in the Boston area, including Fort Point Arts Community Inc. (FPAC) and the Boston Visual Artist Union (BVAU). She served as circulation director of Art New England magazine from 1981 to 1983.

Yorra and Dwyer are at present involved in the planning of FAN's Second Annual Celebrity Golf and Tennis Tournament to be held Monday, Sept. 5, at the Brae Burn Country Club.

On Sunday, Sept. 14, FAN will be hosting a reception, provided by the S.S. Livestock Restaurant at the Newton Marriott, for artists, performers, musicians and supporters of FAN.

Gridders hit the dirt this week

With baseball championships still undecided in both Waltham and Newton, it's a little hard to concentrate on football, but six area high school teams have taken to the gridiron in an attempt to get the summer-time kinks out of the system.

Under MIAA rules instituted at the start of last season, teams were allowed three days of conditioning before full-pad double sessions began on Monday. Several of the area teams took advantage of the extra time last year, and several schools did the same again this year.

Three teams — Weston, Watertown, and St. Patrick's are attending camps, but for the most part, local clubs can be seen at their respective high schools.

Paul McGovern's Waltham High Hawks started conditioning on Monday and donned apds on Tuesday when double sessions began.

The coach said he will take his troops to the classroom at 9 a.m. for an hour instructional period every morning before the team actually starts the workout at 10.

McGovern said the Hawks will break for lunch at the school around noon and will get back to business around 2 p.m. with another classroom session. A two-hour afternoon workout will begin at 3.

Eighty-five players passed physicals and, when the weeding-out period is over, McGovern said he expects 25 to 30 freshman and sophomores and about 25 or so juniors to stay on with the subvarsity teams, while approximately 45 players will dress for the varsity club each week.

Pete Capodilupo didn't take his team out early, but the Newton North head coach said the Tigers don't really need it because the season starts so late.

Newton will open on Sept. 19, which gives Capodilupo almost four full weeks of practice.

"Football is a big commitment and we're asking the guys for an extra week," said Capodilupo of his decision not to call on his gridders until Monday. "We didn't do it last year and the kids came back in good shape."

Newton North athletes reported Monday for physicals and started practice that morning. Capodilupo said the first three days will be strictly non-contact, but the coach expects the team to start hitting on Wednesday afternoon.

Capodilupo said he will vary the practice schedules, but said the team will practice early mornings and sometime again in the mid afternoon.

Art Kojoyian's Newton South Lions began conditioning on Thursday following morning physicals, and launched double sessions in full pads on Monday.

Newton South did use the three additional days last season, and Kojoyian is all in favor of the extra time.

"It's very beneficial," he said. "It's three days of non-contact practice. We get in a lot of stretching and a lot of running to get them back into shape. And we still have a full week of double sessions before scrimmages."

The week's schedule looks something like this: 9 to 11 a.m. full pads, full workout; 11 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. lunch at South High; 12:15 p.m. to 2 p.m. afternoon workout in helmets and shoulder pads.

"We'll give them a tough workout in the morning, but the afternoon practice will be a light one," Kojoyian promised.

Watertown was making its 17th trip to Camp Belknap in Wolfboro, N.H. Sunday with Coach John Barbati once again at the helm.

Littleton High, N.H. was to join Watertown at the camp.

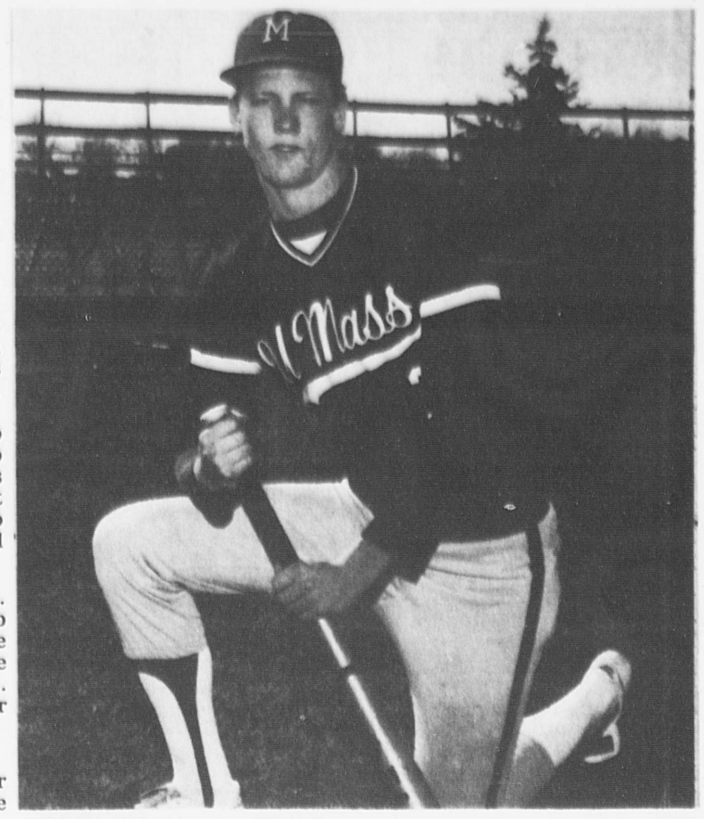

Weston Coach Howie Neild took his gridders to Winchendon School in Central Massachusetts on Sunday for a week-long camp. The Wildcats will return Friday.

Foley said he expects a group of about 50 to 60 prospects to make the trip, which the Wildcats have been doing since 1977. Last year, Weston traveled to Williston-Northhampton School in East Hampton.

John DiBiaso and his St. Patrick's squad attended Camp Edwards at Otis Air Firce Base on Cape Cod last year, and the journey worked wonders. DiBiaso has taken his 40-player crew back this year.

St. Pat's will return Friday.

"It really prepared us for our first game," DiBiaso said of the camp experience last season.

UMass outfielder Jay Zerner

Chestnut Hill's Zerner all-star for UMass nine

Jay Zerner, son of Rosian Zerner of Chestnut Hill and Dr. John Zerner of Portland, Me., has been elected to the All-Northeast Baseball Team for the 1986 season.

Previously he had been selected to the first team All New England for his .389 bating average as an outfielder and recorded one hit during the All New England game at Fenway Park.

A senior pre-med student at the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus, he will co-captain his school's team during the 1987 season.

Jay began his baseball career with Coach Neal Schwartz in the Newton East Little League as wall as in the Newton International League.

Newton Youth Soccer flourishes

By Mike Stoller
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Progress takes time, and nobody knows it better than Dee Dee Wilcon.

Wilcon was one of three mothers who started the Newton Youth Soccer League in 1975. She worked with Bobbye VanderWalde and Cathy Noonan to help formulate the program, and ever since, soccer in Newton has grown in popularity.

The league's first year saw some 40 youngsters (grades 2-10) participating with one coach. They were divided into four teams and had access to one field. Then, slowly but surely, the program evolved into something big - real big.

In its second year, Newton Youth Soccer had 150 participants and eight teams. This season, there are nearly 1,400 players, 90 teams, 180 coaches, and professional referees.

The unique thing about the league is that it's co-ed with the purpose of teaching the children the fundamentals.

All three mothers coincidently had fourth-grade children in the program when it first started, and though two have left the scene, Wilcon has continued to play an active role as Publicity Chairman.

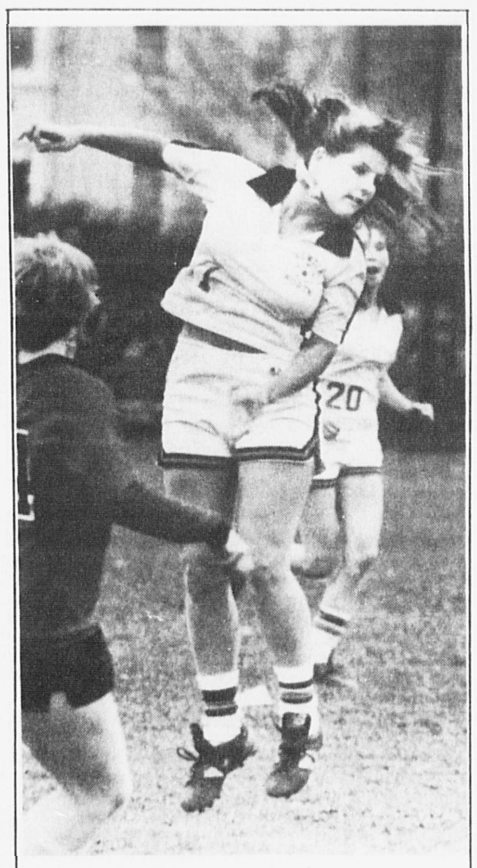

Why does she hang on? "For sentimental reasons and for watching the growth of the league," she says. "They (the league) needed somebody instrumental for some continuity."

But she fully admits that the league's early years saw the blind leading the blind.

"The basic coaching staff was made up of parents," Wilcon says. "We literally sent parents to the library to look at books on soccer.

"Yeah," she continued, "we didn't know much about it (soccer), so we supplied them with books. It (the whole program) was all on a trial and error basis."

Wilcon, VanderWalde and Noonan had learned that soccer was the so called "new sport" in some private schools in the area. With that incentive, the trio spent many hours working with people who had established the Needham Youth Soccer League.

Newton North's Angie McKenna is a product of Newton Youth Soccer

"We did a lot of asking around," Wilcon says. "We did research in other towns by calling schools and worked very closely with Needham. They gave us leads in terms of organizing teams and soliciting parents to coach."

Despite the schools' decrease in enrollment, Wilcon noted that grades three and four (they are combined when playing) have produced the highest number of teams for their age group this season since the program started 11 years ago.

And, she says, there are several reasons for it.

"It (soccer) has universal appeal to it, because it doesn't matter what type of an athlete you are," she says, explaining that in football, one must be physically built for the game.

There is, however, a more competitive league in the fall, which youngsters must try out for.

Still, Wilcon says, there's a cycle that 'perpetuates itself. The kids start playing young and get better. It appeals to the smaller kids who are eliminated from football."

Other reasons, she says, are that there's a lower incident of injury and the equipment is not very expensive. Said Wilcon, "You can buy the whole outfit of a soccer player for less than the cost of a football helmet."

Now, in its 12 season, the program has clinics for the children and parents. In fact, during the first week of the schedule in September, there will be clinics for grades 2-4, to be run by Boston College coach Ben Brewster. Some of his players will assist in the program.

The Newton Youth Soccer League will begin its 12th fall season in early September, and the co-ed league still has limited openings in almost every division.

Grade divisions 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 still have openings, as does the new 9-10th grade division. For further information, call 244-1650 between 4 and 8 p.m.

B. Wales' 5-hitter lifts Buff's Pub, 7-5

NEWTON — Blanca Wales scattered five hits, striking out four, as Buff's Pub edged Wallaby's Pub, 7-5, Sunday at Albemarle Field to knot the best-of-three Newton Twilight Women's Softball League final series at one game apiece.

The teams will decide the championship Wednesday in the rubber game to be played under the lights at Albemarle Field (8:15).

The Buff's Pub pitcher was aided by a six-run second-inning that broke the game open, but Wales hung on for dear life as the regular-season champion Wallaby's crew battled back to make it interesting.

Trailing, 7-3, entering the seventh, Wallaby's scraped for two runs and had the go-ahead run at the plate with two outs before Wales forced Liz Scrooc to pop out to catcher Mary Decourcey.

Wales held Wallaby's silent for three innings while her teammates got her a 6-0 lead to work with. Seven singles in the second inning, six of them in a row, accounted for the six-run inning.

Cathy Hare got things started with an RBI single before Diane Marchioni and Wales roped back-to-back two-run singles. Chris Wales finished off the inning with the seventh single of the frame.

Wallaby's got one run back in the fourth when Barbara Flaherty singled home Barbi Murphy with two outs, but Buff's stole the run right back in the bottom of the inning.

Blanca Wales singled and took second when the ball was misplayed, then scored on a single by Denise Richards.

Wales loaded the bases on walks in the fifth inning before a double by Janet Ferguson scored two with two outs. Wales then fanned Cheryl Vecchione to end the threat.

Wales loaded the bases again in the sixth, but escaped the jam without damage on a harmless pop up to Decourcey.

The summary:

BUFF'S PUB(7)-B. Wales 4-2, Richards 4-2, C. Wales 4-1, Crook 3-0, Decourcey 3-1, Corbett 3-2, Hare 3-2, Goodale 3-1, Marchioni 3-2. Tot. 30-12.

C&K unseats Troubadour to reign in International League

NEWTON — It's all over!

And it's good news for C&K Components, the International League team that dethroned defending champion Troubadour with a 10-8 victory Wednesday night under the lights at Burke Field.

A five-run sixth-inning propelled the win, as C&K rallied from a 7-5 deficit (it was 7-2) to steal the game from Troubadour, which had held the title for two consecutive years.

In the sixth, Ron Pang walked and went to second on a Paul Fay safety. Both runners advanced when Angelo Tomaino singled to fill the bases. Then, David Annese walked to score Pang, Tom McMillen did the same to plate and Fay stole third. Tomaino then scooted to second for a stolen base and Fay came home on the throw. Tomaino went to third, as the ball was tossed into center field and scored on a wild pitch.

Then, Troubadour tallied with three in the fourth to take the lead. Brian Berlandi walked, stole second, went to third on Derek Fergus' single and scored on an error. Fergus eventually scored on a Sam Gottlieb sacrifice bunt and Joe Russillo also drove in a run.

The show started in the first when C&K rallied for two runs. Fay walked and went to second on a foiled pick-off attempt. Tomaino followed with another pass Fay and Tom Donellen singled in Tomaino. A wild pitch allowed Annese to come across and McMillen scored on brother Jim's sacrifice fly.

The summary:

C&K COMPONENTS(10)-Fay 3-2, Tomaino 3-2, Annese 2-0, T. McMillen 2-1, Donellen 4-1, J. McMillen 2-0, Moyer 3-1, Marden 3-0, Fremault 2-0, Pang 0-0. Tot. 24-7.

Hold Rogers Bowl tennis tourney at Longwood Sept. 2-6

More than 100 entries, including most of the reigning national champions, are expected in the James H. Rogers Bowl tennis tournaments for Super Seniors at the Longwood Cricket Club.

The tournaments — three of them for super seniors over 70, over 75, and over 80 — run from Sept. 2 through Sept. 6 at the Longwood Cricket Club in Brookline.

Gardner Mulloy of Miami, Fla., who has been winning national tournaments for 50 years, Ken Beer of California, and Mal Clarke of East Harpswell, Maine are among the national champions who will be competing.

The Rogers Bowl is considered a warm-up for the upcoming National Grass Championships at the Agawam Hunt in Providence, and the National Clay Court Championships in Charlottesville, Va., both of which are held in September.

The tournament is sponsored by James H. Rogers, a member of the Longwood Cricket Club and a Waban resident.

Newton trio letters in baseball at Bentley

WALTHAM — Jerry Marcus, Jim Proia and Alex DeNucci, all of Newton, Watertown's Ari Koufos and Waltham's Jack Clark have been awarded letters for their participation on the Bentley College baseball team, Coach Bob DeFelice announced recently.

It was a rebuilding year for the Falcons, who finished the season with a 14-25 record. Probably the highlight of the season came in the Northeast-8 Conference playoffs when they upset Stonehill and defeated Saint Anselm before falling to Springfield in the championship game.

Marcus and Proia were starters for the Falcons, at shortstop and first base, respectively. Marcus, who appeared in 31 games, hit .191 with a homer, 12 RBIs, five sacrifices and 15 walks. Proia, in his first collegiate season, connected at a .250 clip and also contributed four doubles, two homers, 11 RBIs and 21 walks.

Koufos, a sophomore in his first collegiate season, and Clark, a freshman, were pitchers for the Falcons. Koufos, who struck out a school-record 13 batters against Babson (breaking a mark held by Waltham native Mark Claffey), was 1-5 with a 5.44 earned run average and 33 strikeouts and 44⅔ innings. Clark saw only limited action (seven innings) after missing much of the season due to getting hit in the face with a line drive during batting practice.

DeNucci saw action in 15 contests as a reserve outfielder, hitting .185 with five hits in 27 at bats.

Marcus, who is majoring in finance, is a 1983 graduate of Newton South High School, while Proia and DeNucci are both 1985 grads of Newton North and accountancy majors.

Clark, also an accountancy major, graduated from Waltham High School in 1985. Koufos, a 1984 graduate of Watertown High, is undecided on his major.

Marcus is the son of Marcus and Maurice Marcus of 72 Esty Farm Road. Proia is the son of Dominic and Catherine Proia of 17 Peabody St., and DeNucci is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Joseph DeNucci of 119 Warwick Road.

Koufos is the son of Anastasios and Magdalini Koufos of 9 King St. Clark is the son of John and Joy Clark of 303 Prospect Hill Road.

KC chairs NF charity golf at International

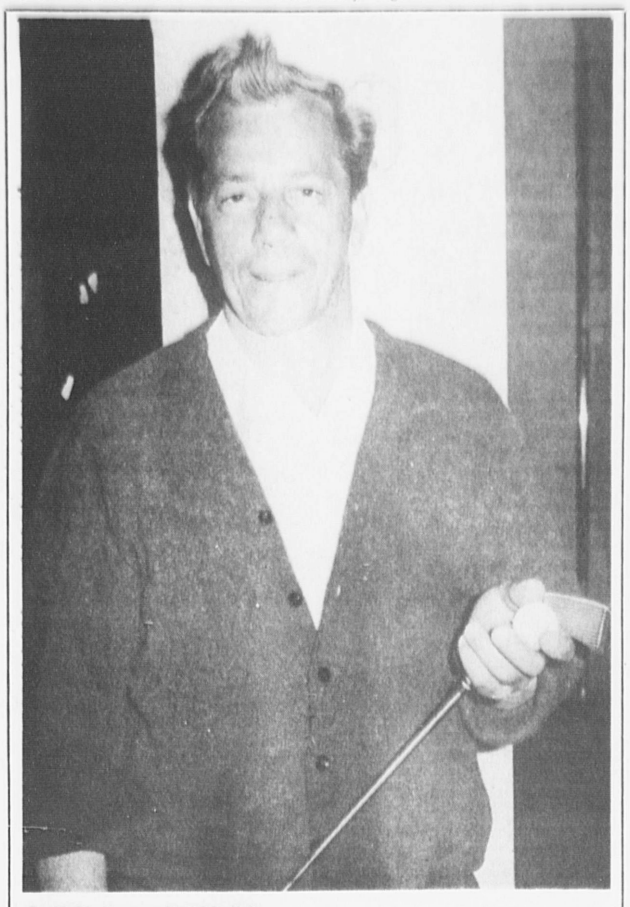

BOLTON — World Champion Boston Celtics Head Coach K.C. Jones, who guided the Celtics to their 16th NBA title in June, will put his coaching expertise aside for one day so that his expert golfing skills can be put to good use in the first annual Neurofibromatosis (NF) Charity Golf Tournament.

Jones, the tournament's honorary chairman, will participate with other golfers in this day of fun and enjoyment at the International Golf Club in Bolton on Friday, Sept. 19.

The tournament is sponsored by the Shawmut Bank of Boston, N.A. and the Kensington Investment Company, Inc.

Registration will begin at 10:30 a.m., which will be followed by "The International" cook-out lunch, then a shotgun start at noon. A cocktail hour, dinner and award auction will follow the day of golfing.

Golf Chairman Val Melidio

Cosgrove golf has silver anniversary

The Charles H. Cosgrove Memorial Golf Tournament, one of the oldest fairway attractions in the area, will celebrate its silver anniversary on Sunday, Sept. 7, at the Wayland Country Club. Awarding of golf prizes and scholarships will be made at the dinner to be held that evening at St. Bernard's Hall in West Newton.

The tournament started in 1962 when 16 golfers played to honor their late alderman and golfing friend. It has grown to the point that now approximately 120 golfers compete and 135 attend the dinner each year. By the time the 1965 tournament was held, the golf committee was able to save enough money to award a $200 scholarship to a deserving West Newton youth. Last year, the scholarship was worth $1,000 and the total amount awarded to date is $18,750.

To mark the silver anniversary of the tournament the scholarship award will be increased from $1,000 to $2,500. This generous scholarship and a day of golf with old friends would please Charlie Cosgrove.

The tourney winner is the low net score and there has never been anyone to win more than once. The low gross crown has been won five times by both Len Devane and Tom O'Rourke. The lowest gross scores of the last 24 years were 69's, turned in by Devane in 1965 and by Dan Curtis in 1976.

Applicants for the scholarship awards must be residents of West Newton or Ward 3, enrolled in or accepted at a college or junior college, or nursing program. Scholarship applications are available at the office of the scholarship chairman, Dr. Benjamin L. Antonellis, 130 Walnut St., Newtonville, MA 02160, and must be returned to him by Sept. 1.

Co-chairmen of the event are Edmond White and Paul Burke. Val Melideo is serving as golf chairman and Larry Sprow is ticket chairman.

Joe Cosgrove, John Walsh, Larry Sprow, Jim Ryan, Bob Cronin, Sam Rizza, Tom Rooney, Frank Vona, Chick Carvelli, Dick Cronin and Ed Scarlett are committee members. The cost of a ticket is $35.

Persons wishing to donate to the scholarship fund may do so by contacting the treasurer, Ed White, at 70 Rowe St., Auburndale, MA 02166.

Framingham in ASA Nationals

NEWTON — The Newton sponsored Framingham Indians will compete in the National Finals of the ASA Class A Men's Fast Pitch Softball League starting Thursday.

After winning the 10-team Regionals earlier this month, the Indians, sponsored by Yuberti Landscaping of Newton, will travel to Minot, N.D. for the 43-team nationals expected to start Thursday and continue through Sunday.

Coached by Wayne Headley, a former Waltham resident, the Indians are led by pitchers Jim Smith and Jerry Thomes, both of Newton.

Armando Proia, another Newton resident, led the team during the playoffs with eight RBI and two homers. He also batted .357 in five playoff games.

Other Newton sluggers include Kevin Marden (.417), Steve Wilson (.385), and Bob DiGrazia (.333). Former Newton residents Dave Calabro (.467 with six runs scored) and Mario Lucchetti (.308), also helped the Indians' cause.

Tryouts for PeeWee all-stars

The Minuteman Flames Youth Hockey program will be having tryouts for its open PeeWee All-star team (players born in 1974 and 1975) at Watertown Arena on Saturday, Aug. 22, at noon, and Sunday, Aug. 24, at 1 p.m.

The team will face other competitive North American Amateur Hockey Association (NAAHA) teams in both league and tournament play.

The Minuteman Flames is the largest program in NAAHA, with teams in both the Metropolitan Boston Hockey League (MBHL) and the Northeast Hockey League (NHL). The program is dedicated to improving player skills, promoting the team concept, and the enjoyment of competitive sports.

Watertown Arena will be the team's home arena. For more about the team and tryouts, contact the coach, George Campbell, at 891-7293 or the Mintueman Flames president, Larue Renfroe, at 369-2222.

Braintree tourney

East out after loss in semis

BRAINTREE — Bob Hoffang scored from third base on an overthrow in the bottom of the sixth to lift South Randolph to an instant, 2-1, victory Thursday over Newton East in the semifinals of the Braintree Baseball Tournament played at Watson Field.

East, which had lost one previous game in the double-elimination tourney, exits from the scene with the second loss. The Gerry Sack-coached squad was just one victory away from the finals.

Trailing 1-0 entering the last inning, East rallied to tie the score.

With Joe Blanchard on first base, Bob O'Toole fouled off six pitches before taking ball four to keep the rally alive, and then Newton got some help from the Randolph defense.

Winning pitcher Tom Rideout threw one to the backstop, and the ball was recovered in time but was thrown into center field on the pickoff attempt. Blanchard scored to tie the game and O'Toole cruised into third base.

Rideout regained his cool, though, fanning the next two Newton batters to send it to the last of the sixth.

Hoffang dropped a perfect bunt single to leadoff and, one out later, went to second on a James Browski single up the middle, only the fifth hit off losing pitcher Beau Burlingame.

Brenda McNeil then got a piece of a Burlingame pitch that squirted into the infield, and when East tried for Hoffgang at third base, the ball sailed into the outfield, allowing the winning run to score.

Earlier in the tournament, Bob O'Toole came home on a passed ball in the second inning and righthander Joe Blanchard made the lone run stand up, firing a two-hitter with 13 strikeouts, as East nipped Brookfield, 1-0.

Blanchard had to outdo Brookfield righty Lou Pettinato for the victory, and the Newton righty could not have been better. Almost as impressive as Blanchard's 13 K's was the fact that he only walked two batters, something the just-turned 13-year-older has depended on in his previous starts.

In his last four appearances, Blanchard has passed a total of four opponents. Pettinato, despite striking out nine, walked six total in the game.

Blanchard retired the side in order in the third, fourth, and sixth innings, striking out the side in the final frame. A bunt single by Bill Sharte with two outs in the first inning and a single by John Doherty in the fifth were the only hits off Blanchard.

Doherty's single created some problems for Blanchard, but the righthander got out of the jam with the help of some sturdy defense.

Joe Gentile had walked to open the fifth before Doherty singled him to second. Gary Freitas then faked a bunt that drew third baseman Steve Fishbach in towards the plate, and Gentile broke from second on the attempted steal.

Newton shortstop Ted Delicandro spotted Gentile and quickly covered the bag, receiving the throw from catcher O'Toole just in time to tag Gentile sliding into the base.

O'Toole scored the game winner without the benefit of a hit. The catcher reached first on an infield error and advanced around the bases on two wild pitches. He then trotted home on a passed ball with two outs.

Newton East threatened in both the third and fourth innings, putting two men on with no out in each frame, but stranded the runners.

The summary:

NEWTON EAST(1)-McCue 2-0, Delicandro 3-1, Blanchard 2-0, B. O'Toole 3-0, Burlingame 2-0, Elliott 3-1, Fishbach 1-0, Gregory 2-0, Cote 0-0, Kazimi 1-0. Tot. 19-2.

Beal, Hagar set swim marks

NEWTON — Despite record-shattering performances by Steven Beal and Jennifer Hagar, the Newton Recreation Swim Club finished a close second to Westwood in the Suburban League "A" Regionals held Saturday at Gath Pool. A total of 600 swimmers from 13 different towns participated in the event.

Westwood nailed down first place with 200 points, followed by Newton with 195. After the butterfly events Newton was in first place with 37 points, slipped to second place after the freestyle, regained the lead following the breaststroke competition with 93 points.

Although Newton swimmers were moving up places in the finals, Newton was unable to catch Westwood.

Beal, competing in the 9 and 10 boys' backstroke, broke a 13 year old record held by Steve Ehhlich of Natick with a time of 17.51. The previous standard was 17.70.

Jennifer Hagar set her record in the 13 and 14 girls' breaststroke. She eclipsed the six year old record held by Roxanne Reardon of Wayland. Hagar's time was 32.73 for the 50-yard event.

Rick Osterberg won a pair of events for Newton among the 11 and 12 boys. He captured both the butterfly (32.55) and the backstroke (35.93).

Newton's 9 and 10 boys' relay team comprised of Micah Hauben, Steven Beal, Bo Levin and Eric Osterberg, was seated second and won the event. the 15 and 18 boys' 200 freestyle relay team beat out a strong Needham team. The Newton quartet was formed by Bobby Greene, Tim Troiano, Jim Robertson and Kenny Goulston.

Medals were awarded to the top six places.

Minuteman Classic slated Sept. 28

The Minuteman Classic 10K Road Race, directed by the Concord Recreation Department, will be held on Sunday, Sept. 28, at 1 p.m. The race, now in its eighth year, will start and finish at Sentry Insurance, opposite Emerson Hospital on Route 2.

The course runs through historic Minuteman National Park (Old North Bridge and Battle Grounds) and country roads.

There are T-shirts for all registrants, refreshments and water stops at two and four miles. A digital display will be at the finish line with awards for the top three finishers in all categories.

The divisions, and the 1985 times for Men were: Open (18-29) — 30:32; Open (30-39) — 30:46; Master (40-49) — 34:44; Master (50 & over) — 37:15. For the Women the times were: Open (18-29) — 37:43; Open (30-39) — 37:08; Master (40-49) — 46:16; and Master (50 & over) — 52:39.

The sponsors of the race — Middlesex Savings Banks, Sentry Family of Companies, Welch Foods and Concord residents — have a category for their own runners. Donations have been accepted from Produce King of Belmont and Concrd Lumber Corporation.

Pre-registrations are now being accepted. For more information, or to register, call 369-6460.

Furniture industry finds comfort sales forecasts

By Tom Minehart
AP Business writer

HIGH POINT, N.C. — As more baby-boom Americans seek comfort at home and in the styles and ideas of the past, the U.S. furniture industry is finding comfort in the sales figures this portends.

Young urban Americans would just as soon go home and relax after a day's work, says Nancy High of the American Furniture Manufacturers Association. And they're more likely to sink into a soft English Country reproduction than the harder European styles popular a few years ago.

"The high-tech look as evidenced by the severe Eurostyle look is sort of passing from favor," says Ms. High, spokeswoman for the association's Furniture Information Council. "There's a new interest in softness, and you see this in upholstery, with soft fabrics and supple leathers. People are getting so stressed out at work, trying to fight the 'great battle,' that they just want to go home and back to the womb."

That desire, combined with low interest rates and a big increase in housing starts this year, is apparently translating into spending more money on furniture.

The association expects retail sales at furniture stores to rise 8.4 percent this year to $24.8 billion and jump 9.6 percent next year to $27.2 billion. Wholesale shipments of U.S.-made furniture should rise 6.3 percent this year to $14.2 billion and 9 percent next year to $15.5 billion.

Instead of choosing the "hard corners and exceedingly bright garish colors" of some Eurostyle pieces, more customers are looking for the large floral prints, ruffles and flounces of English and American country style furniture, says Ms. High. Many are collecting reproductions of classic French and English pieces of the 18th and 19th centuries.

"It's the same way with clothing," says David Zagaroli, a freelance furniture designer in Hickory. "We've gone full cycle and we're going back to Bass Weejuns, belts and hats. We're not as wild as we used to be."

While consumers are "trying to get to a less plastic world," they're also more open to combining furniture from widely varying styles, he says.

"It's real eclectic now," he says. "That's wonderful for furniture collectors, but it's terrible for manufacturers who want to sell entire collections. Manufacturers only decided to do that so they could sell more furniture. There's no right or wrong in this business."

Contemporary furniture remains very popular, but it seems to be getting softer in color and texture. Ruth Clark, a designer for Pearson Co. in High Point, says that among the new styles is the Southwestern look, with desert colors and geometric designs inspired by American Indian art. Much of the upholstery is "very puffy and very inviting," she says.

English country furniture in a style recalling the Victorian era is also growing in popularity, she says.

"It's quite elegant, and there's a lot of interest in decorative trim — braid trim, evensome fringe," she says. "We're seeing some very highly glazed English chintz fabric, in sofas and easy chairs with large floral patterns strong in color — rosy reds and true greens."

About 45 percent of U.S. wood furniture sales last year were country or Early American, says Ms. High. Contemporary styles took 22 percent of the market, 18th century reproductions took 13 percent and French court and provincial styles took 10 percent.

She says these are among the other trends this year:

— Ready-to-assemble furniture — formerly known as "knockdown" — continues to claim a growing share of the market. Consumers save money and shipping costs by putting together the pieces themselves.

— Wicker furniture is still growing in popularity and in the types of pieces it's being used in. "It's not just in Florida homes or in sunporches, but people are using it in their bedrooms and even in cribs and bars," she says. "If you can make it in wood, somebody's making it in wicker. It's a new look, but not a heavy look. Because we're living in smaller spaces, its lightness appeals to people."

— Metal beds are approaching $100 million a year in wholesale sales, she says. The beds may be made of brass or iron or in combination with wood.

— Daybeds that work as sofas by day and beds at night are also hot, as are twin beds featuring a second bed that can be pulled out from underneath for a guest.

— Oriental reproductions, computer desks, entertainment systems and wall units continue to be popular and undergo development in style and function.

AFMA market research director Marty Reddan forecasts a 15.7 percent increase in housing starts this year to 2 million. He also anticipates a 9.5 percent increase in housing resales to 3.5 million this year.

The housing figures would indicate a larger increase in furniture sales than is actually happening, he says. In 1972, for example, 2.1 million housing starts led to a 19 percent increase in shipments.

The difference may be due to continued uncertainty among in the lower end of the economic spectrum, says Jerry Epperson, furniture analyst for Wheat First Securities of Richmond, Va.

The geodesic dome design is gaining acceptance

By Jeff Barnard
Associated Press writer

BANDON, ORE. — When Sam Coomer decided to build a geodesic dome to replace his farmhouse on the Coquille River, some people thought he might have gone off the deep end.

"They thought maybe some counseling or a trip to Hawaii would be good for him," recalled Rick Smith, who sold Coomer the kit to build his dome and advised him on the do-it-yourself project. "Now people say, 'I wish I could have one of those.' The feeling toward domes has changed."

Patented in 1947 by R. Buckminster Fuller, the geodesic dome design is gaining acceptance among home buyers.

"The counterculture tried them first and domes got a bad reputation in the '60s as a hippie structure because they weren't being very well built," said Ted Heid, marketing manager of Oregon Dome Inc. in Eugene, which made the kit Coomer used to build his house.

"By the mid-'70s, enough people got involved, expert carpenters like Roger Boothe (president of Oregon Dome), that they started refining the structure," Heid added. "Now, because of those refinements, the market is steadily growing each year."

Though dome manufacturers and the National Dome Council don't divulge sales figures, Heid estimates that between 1,200 and 2,000 dome houses are sold each year, accounting for about 1 percent of the new-home market.

"With anything new you have to educate people and that process has been going on about 10 years," said Heid.

He said at least seven companies around the country each sell between 100 and 200 dome kits a year, with perhaps 20 other companies doing business on a smaller scale.

As a free-standing structure, the dome allows the owner to put interior walls anywhere he wants them.

"We had thought of building a split-level house," said Coomer. "But we like the dome because it's as open and airy as you want to make it."

The dome's surface area is one-third less than a conventional building, which cuts down on heat loss in the winter.

"As yet they are only being purchased by individuals," said Heid. "Most houses are built by contractors as 'spec' homes. Domes haven't broken into that market yet. That I see as the next breakthrough in the dome market."

It's been 20 years since Fuller's design became widely known as the United States' pavilion at Expo '67 in Montreal.

In an interview in 1983, shortly before his death, Fuller estimated that 300,000 geodesic domes stood around the world, with about one-third of them built in playgrounds as toys for children.

Richard Robinson, president of Monterey Domes Inc. in Riverside, Calif., estimates there are about 15,000 dome homes in the country.

"California kind of kicked things off, but some markets are developing in the East just as strong as California, like the mid-Atlantic states and some areas in the South and Southeast," he said. "It started out as an alternate housing thing, but a lot of domes are going into highly custom homes."

Smith's company, Double R Domes, has been involved with projects at both ends of the spectrum, ranging from Coomer's do-it-yourself dome for about $34,000 to a $400,000 custom home on a bluff overlooking the Pacific that features custom-cut walnut moldings, Italian tile, stained-glass windows and stainless steel nails.

"The owners wanted something unique," said Smith.

Things took off for Oregon Dome in 1983, when the company's kit was featured in Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

"We had 30,000 people respond to that story," said Boothe. "We went from seven employees to 30."

He said sales jumped from $80,000 a year to $2 million.

The dome shell is made of 60 triangles that bolt together. Depending on the size of the dome, the triangles are made in a jig from bevel-cut 2-by-4s or 2-by-6s with a plywood skin glued and stapled over them.

Oregon Dome has a design staff and a computer graphics system to turn out custom plans for each buyer. The company also produces accessories, like cupolas and extensions that can be added to the dome.

The company sends a supervisor along with the kit to help with the dome raising, which can be accomplished in a day with an inexperienced crew. Then it's up to the owner to roof it and do the interior work.

Sod can help you complete your beautiful home

By June Hicks
The Detroit News

Sod offers instant green to owners of new homes or others redoing a mangy old lawn.

Provided it is properly installed and kept up, sod offers permanent green carpeting to set off one's house and landscape.

In addition to beauty, during the summer it pays to consider the air-conditioning effects of grass.

A major advantage of sodding is that it can be placed anytime during the growing season provided water is available during dry periods.

Paul Rieke, turf grass specialist with the Michigan State University Cooperative Extension Service, advises homeowners to learn to do the job themselves. They can save money that way, or if they hire someone else, know that the job is being done right.

If anyone, professional or amateur, thinks he can stint on soil preparation because sod is being used, he's wrong. It's just as important with this as with seeding and will prevent future problems.

Let's assume that the homeowner is removing an old lawn and putting in a new one:

— Experts recommend use of a non-selective weed killer such as Round Up to kill everything. (Read directions carefully.) It should be applied to foliage of grass and weeds present in the current lawn. The material translocates into roots of such pests as quackgrass so it doesn't pop up later.

— Seven to 10 days later, remove the old sod.

— When ground is dry enough to not form clods, till existing soil to a depth of at least four inches — six inches would be even better. If needed, add loamy topsoil. Work down into the ground. Fine-textured clay soils present a special problem because they compact easily and grass roots can't penetrate them. To improve these, experts sugggest applying two or three inches of sandy topsoil or two inches each of coarse sand and fibrous peat. Don't layer but mix down well into existing soil to a six-inch depth.

— Fertilizer should be applied at rates recommended according to soil tests. If soil tests aren't available, apply 10 to 15 pounds of 5-20-20 or 6-24-24 per 1,000 square feet. Incorporate this into the upper three to four inches.

— Smooth the surface, Water thoroughly and allow to settle with the finished grade about 1-1/2 to two inches below walks and drives.

— Never lay the sod on powdery dry soil. This, said Don Juchartz, executive director of the Sod Growers Association, is a most common mistake. Loosen the soil gently with a rake and then lightly moisten to a depth of about 1-1/2 inches deep. Don't turn the ground into mud. Ends of the sod pieces should be staggered to prevent lines across the turf. Make sure that edges are in good contact with each other but not overlapping. Avoid stretching the sod or gaps will develop.

— Once the sod is laid, roll to insure good contact with the soil. This eliminates air pockets. Don't, warns Juchartz, use too heavy a roller, certainly not much over 150 pounds. Since water is added to most for weight, he suggests not putting in more than about 20 gallons (weighing about eight pounds each).

— Thoroughly water the sod immediately after rolling.

— As a general rule, uniform watering will be necessary every day to keep the sod moist until the roots become established. It's best to water during mid-day. Be sure to apply enough water to wet the soil beneath the sod. Rooting normally requires two to three weeks. Once the sod has become established, watering can gradually be reduced to once a week or less.

— Mowing should begin when required by the growth of grass. Recommended height for bluegrass sod is 1-1/2 to 2-1/2 inches. Avoid removing more than one-third of the leaf surface at a time.

— Once sod has rooted, a regular fertilization program is recommended. Generally four applications per year are suggested for higher quality lawns. (Distributed by Scripps Howard News Service.)

Beech lags behind other woods

By Wood
A Meredith magazine

There's a plentiful, cabinet-quality hardwood — pretty as yellow birch, strong as hard maple and pliable as ash. But hardly anyone uses it.

American beech grows over nearly half the nation, yet it seems you only hear about it from the brewery that touts "beechwood-aged" beer, says Wood magazine. (Beech, as it turns out, imparts no taste of its own to the brew.) Long ago, however, English craftsmen turned to a European variety of beech to make legs for Windsor chairs. Even the ancient Greeks and Romans worked beech into tables, chairs and chests.

In this country, beech lags behind other woods in popularity because it takes careful handling during seasoning to avoid checking, warping, shrinking and discoloration. To avoid the processing expense, beech logs are sold for paper pulp or made into clothespins.

Some beech is used in the furniture industry for framing and bentwood parts. In the cabinet shop, it's made into moldings.

You'll find beech in every hemisphere, yet only one species grows in the U.S., Fagus grandifolia. Loosely translated, fagus means "to eat," referring to its edible nuts, while grandifolia means "large leaved."

Beech trees often grow in pure stands in lower elevations from Maine south to northern Florida and west to Wisconsin and Texas. In prime conditions, trees may tower to 120 feet and approach four feet in diameter. A slow grower, beech is a survivor, living up to 300 and 400 years.

You can spot beech by its smooth, skinlike, silver-gray bark, here and there disfigured by dark blotches and scars.

Beech wood resembles yellow birch, but with a tint of red in the darker brown heartwood and a hint of pink in the lighter sapwood. The grain is fine, with telltale, tiny pores. Count on beech to be hard, strong, and heavy — it weight about 45 pounds per cubic foot dry.

Think of beech as working like hard maple and bending like ash. It doesn't yield easily to hand tools, but it machines well.

Screws and nails hold tight in beech's close grain. Gluing presents no problems, either. The wood readily takes stain and sands to a smooth finish.

Beech does have a peculiarity, however. Because of the heartwood and sapwood's markedly different expansion and contraction rates, you wouldn't mix the two in the same project. If you did, you could end up with separated joints or uneven surfaces in the finished piece.

Beech represents one of a handful of woods that could be classified as "all-purpose for interior use. It fills the bill for frame construction as well as finished surfaces, and it bends when steamed.

Made into drawers, beech exhibits the unique property of becoming slicker as it rubs against other wood members.

In woodturning, beech excels in objects with delicate stems, such as goblets. For toys, it resists splintering and chipping, and has no toxic properties (keep that quality in mind for bowls and cutting boards, too). Beech also resists wear when wet.

Although beech may be abundant in the forest, you won't find it everywhere at retail, especially far from its source. The large suppliers that carry beech charge less for it than the more popular hard maple or yellow birch.

Beech boards may be as wide at 12 inches and range up to 16 feet long. While beech sometimes becomes veneer, due to lack of demand, you'll seldom find it used as the face on hardwood plywood.

Furniture maker designs with flare

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Garry Knox Bennett, a self-taught furniture maker in Oakland, Calif., bears little resemblance to the old-fashioned idea of a furniture craftsman.

After expending a great deal of time, effort and money to produce an original piece, he's apt to decide it's too perfect and put in the first blemish himself.

One of his more famous exploits was to hammer a large bent nail into a meticulously-crafted cabinet he had just completed. The nail substitutes for a door pull and could hardly be missed since it's right in the center of the piece.

When the cabinet was on display at a furniture store in New York, one customer recorded his opinion when nobody was looking.

"'I think this nail business is a stupid idea,' he scribbled on the drawer bottom. Then he signed the message and dated it. Except for the fact that somebody stole the nail, the message might never have been found," says Bennett.

Bennett actually started the joke himself when he hammered the nail. He had several friends witness the desecration and sign their names on the bottom of another drawer.

If this sounds suspiciously like he action of an artist, don't count n Bennett to go along with the escription. "Everyone wants to be called an artist. I'm satisfied with the title of furniture maker," he says.

However, Bennett, who is 52, has been a painter and sculptor. He is one of a growing number of individuals making what is being called art furniture.

The expensive, usually one-of-a-kind pieces they produce are usually shown in galleries, not furniture stores, and customers tend to ask themselves, "Is it art?" not "Is it comfortable?" Bennett makes about 50 pieces a year, working alone or with the help of one assistant.

Although artist-made furniture is not new — Pablo Picasso made a few pieces of furniture — it does appear to be enjoying a new popularity.

One indication of this is the recent formation of the Society of Furniture Artists (SOFA).

According to Rosanne Somerson, a member of the steering committee for the group and editor of its first newsletter, one of the goals is to get art critics and publications to treat the furniture as art, while at the same time providing a forum so that other artists, collectors and the public will be able to learn more about art furniture.

"A number of significant national exhibitions have gone by without any reviews or documentation. We would like to correct this and also expand people's ideas about furniture."

Somerson says that the establishment of a national group is only one indication of the development of the field of art furniture. She said that galleries and museums have begun taking an interest in this work, which is leading to a greater visibility. For example, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts now purchases art furniture that is placed within the museum so that visitors can sit down on it.

The motivation of those who buy handmade art furniture for their own home remains the same as it has been over hundreds of years, according to Kristina Madsen, a furniture maker in the Boston area. "Many of the finest pieces were strictly ceremonial and displayed the wealth and taste of the owner," she says.

Those who buy art furniture today tend to be willing to suffer for art. For Gloria Choi, an Oakland, Calif., collector of Wendell Castle's furniture, a dining room table made by Castle is one of her most treasured possessions.

But getting the table in place with the proper chairs has been the work of years. The fact that the walnut table has no middle didn't faze her. (Castle has made her an insert to cover the artistic empty space when more surface is required for dining.) But finding chairs to go with the unique table was a bigger problem. After years of fruitless search, she eventually solved it by commissioning Castle to make eight chairs.

Major appliances getting smarter

By Better Homes and Gardens
A Meredith magazine

Thanks to digital controls, major appliances have never been smarter.

But you don't have to be a computer genius to use them, says Better Homes and Gardens magazine.

Digital appliances use a microcomputer to store and sort all kinds of information. Push a touch pad and your new washer-dryer, microwave oven or dishwasher will perform one task or many tasks in sequence. The computer remembers what to do when, making possible jobs you could never accomplish with a traditional knob-and-dial machine.

Manufacturers want operation to be as simple as using a Touch-Tone phone, but you should ask for a complete demonstration in the store before you buy.

Major appliances with standard controls still dominate the market, and digital-equipped machines cost from $100 to $200 more than a comparable standard model. So why are more and more people buying digital?

— Electronic controls provide you with more information about your appliance. For example, if the spray arm on your dishwasher becomes blocked, the machine's control panel will flash the information so you can take care of it.

— The new appliances give you the best possible performance for the least energy. Digital wizardry can delay your clothes washer's start time for you until a later time of day when energy costs may be lower.

— A single touch can start a sequence of operations. Preset cycles even prevent inexperienced users from putting together cycles or options that might produce the wrong results.

— Built-in trobleshooting systems will tell you when something is wrong, and what you can do about it. If you do have to call out for service, the internal diagnosis will speed the actual repair.

— The smooth control panels are easier to clean and keep clean than knobs or switches on standard models.

Refrigerators-freezers: The control panel signals when the doors are left open and when the interior temperature is too warm; it even lets you know when the power has been off too long. Some models also adjust internal temperature when the room temperature is cooler or warmer than usual.

Dishwashers: The control panel will tell you which cycle the washer is in, how many minutes are left in the cycle, and when the cycle is complete. Some models let you program in a "handle with care" mode for your finest china and crystal or a heavy-duty cleaning command to handle extra-dirty pots and pans.

Conventional ovens: Before electronics, your oven temperature could vary by as much as 25 degrees, a considerable variation. Now, fingertip controls allow you to expect accuracy within five degrees — a great asset when you're baking cookies or cakes. Also available are delayed start and stop features, programmed cleaning, and continuous-cleaning functions.

Washers: The biggest electronic advantage is an energy-saving one — washer controls that can be programmed for maximum energy conservation. Preprogrammed cycles adjust washer agitation rates and spin speeds for all types of fabrics and loads. The controls will even prevent you from making an error. For example, if you ask for a warm-water rinse for a load of permanent press clothing, the microcomputer control will respond with a cold-water rinse. It "knows" that cold works best for a permanent press cycle to prevent excessive wrinkling.

Tile surfaces are popular

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Despite a price tag as much as five times that of competing materials, tile surfaces on floors, walls and countertops are becoming a craze in many parts of the country.

The variety of tile colors, patterns and shapes is making artists out of home decorators.

But to reap the maximum benefits, it's necessary not only to select patterns carefully, but also to pay close attention to the actual installation, even when you hire a professional tile installer, says New York interior designer Bebe Winkler.

According to the designer, who frequently specifies tile installations in kitchens and baths, choosing an experienced tile installer is key.

To avoid unpleasant surprises, however, especially when you don't know the installer's work, lay out the tile where it will be installed and decide jointly how wide and what color the grout should be and where tile cuts should be made. On countertops, for example, it usually works best to cut at the rear.

Before installation comes tile selection, a task that is becoming difficult, given the great number of choices. However, some design principles can help narrow down the field. For example, when selecting a tile pattern for floors or walls, remember that the size of the tile should generally be in proportion to the size of the room.

A large room may easily take a 12-inch tile while a smaller room may call for a small size, according to the Italian Tile Council.

Floor tiles are available in a variety of shapes that can be used in combination. For example, you might select white octagons and then install small black insets. Or you could create a border by laying a perimeter of rectangles end to end and then fill in with square tiles or a pattern.

Rectangles can be arranged in a single or double herringbone formation, staggered or used to create another design. Squares can be laid on the diagonal or in a brick pattern. You might also combine different colors and patterns to give the illusion of an area rug.

These few examples illustrate one of tile's greatest assets: it can be used to create many different effects. Add to this the fact that tile is an easy-care, long-lasting surface with generally good resistance to abrasion, water absorption, chemicals, dirt and fire, and you can see see why this expensive yet desirable surface has been gaining adherents in recent years.

Since tiles vary to some extent in terms of durability, consider carefully the characteristics of a particular tile in relation to the location. For example, for floors, evaluate how heavy the traffic pattern will be and if the flooring is likely to be walked on while wet. If so, choose tiles with a very low water absorption rate and those which have good slip resistance.

Today, some tiles have an abrasive grit added to the surface to minimize chances of slipping when the floor is wet. Water absorption rates range from near zero for fully vitrified stoneware to 25 percent for majolica.

Although Miss Winkler usually is guided by the distributor's recommendation in terms of durability, she says that very shiny glazed tiles tend to be more delicate than unglazed or dull glazed tiles. "They show scratches and chip easily in my limited experience, so I tend not to select them for places where there will be heavy use."

Tiles are frequently used on kitchen countertops and backsplashes. Other locations include hallways as trim or garden rooms where they can serve as passive energy collectors.

Bathroom vanities, potting tables and flower arranging areas, dressing tables and kitchen tables have been tiled with excellent results. For corners and edges, tiles are usually angled or mitered. You can also buy rounded edging pieces that curve upwards to contain spills.

Although Italian tile is perhaps best know for its decorative appeal, tile is made in many countries. American makers offer a great choice in colors. Mexican tiles are appreciated for the handmade quality they display. French tiles are often of sophisticated designs.

Tile distributors often have a wide selection of styles and consumers are advised to shop around before settling on a particular design.

Dressing up the walls

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Today's interest in dressing up the surfaces of walls has led to a new emphasis on unusual painting techniques.

Strie, which is also known as combed texture; antiquing; lacquer, and trompe l'oeil are among several methods interior designers are employing.

The enthusiastic amateur can tackle these specialized finishes with a willing heart and a little practice, says Marilyn Rolnick, an interior designer in Dallas who has made painted finishes something of a specialty in her residential work there.

Recently, Rolnick offered some tips for both the do-it-yourselfer and the individual who chooses to hire a professional painter to apply these effects.

"The first step in any technique is preparing the walls," she said. Floating, which involves applying a layer of a bedding compound to walls, is the best method to obtain the requisite unblemished surface.

Select the strie technique if you want to add texture to a wall. The process involves raking with a broom or a metal painter's comb the still-damp bedding compound (available premixed from paint stores) to create a series of ridges. If the wall is combed vertically, the ceiling will appear higher; if horizontal lines are made, the room will appear wider.

To add even more texture to a strie wall, she recommends painting the combed wall and then topping that coat with a glaze in another color, which is then partially wiped off. If the base coat is white, it is necessary to apply a clear sealer before glazing.

To give new life to wood paneling, try painting or antiquing it.

"Painting dark wood paneling with a light-colored enamel is relatively easy and really brightens a room," added the decorator.

"The Single Persons Answer"

Published Thursdays in the Daily Transcript and the News Tribune

This page is the perfect place for the unmarried, widowed, divorced or separated to meet that "special someone." It's a way to take charge of your own life in a dignified, confidential manner. Best of all, it will be someone who lives fairly close to you.

THE SINGLES ADVISOR

RAYMOND J. CABOT, LCSW

Problems of marriage carried into singlehood

Dear Ray,

I seem to be running into the same problems as a single that I had when I was married. I'm a 38 year old professional who has been divorced for the past three years.

When I was married, I tried to be a good father to our two children, tried to be a good husband, tried to be a good son-in-law and son, tried to be involved with world events and issues in my community, and tried to help around the home. All this while I was also involved in trying to climb the corporate ladder. My wife often complained that I was either not doing enough financially or as a parent or romantically. Instead of getting encouragement and appreciation for what I was doing, it seemed that I was getting pressured to do even more. I felt overwhelmed, overburdened, and ready to give up.

In short, I found that my love had turned into resentment and that the promise of "living happily ever after" was becoming a long, drawn out drugery. I had a good job, my wife and I had a house in the suburbs, two nice children, respect in our community, but our "American dream" had turned into an "American nightmare".

After we divorced, I felt like a new liberated man. I lived it up and had several exciting affairs. After ahwile, however, this lifestyle started wearing thin and I thought of settling down in a relationship that had depth—possibly even re-marrying. I met a women with who I fell in love and who loved me in return. We are considering marriage, but here's the problem.

I not only deal with the same demands that I faced while married–except for in-laws–but find that my time is still spent in the corporate climb, community activities, etc. I also find that I'm squeezing in time to be with my children and with the women that I love. And she is starting to pressure me to spend more time with her. I'm afraid that the same thing that happened before will happen again. I even tried going to a psychiatrist. Finding time for him was a problem. While he was obsessing about my childhood and talking about medications, my life issues were not being addressed. I dropped him and felt that I had nothing to lose by asking for your opinion. What do you think?

J.L., Weston

Dear J.L.,

While there has been a great deal of awareness about the "superwomen" trying to do it all, there has been little awareness of the "superman". Not the macho-type superman, but the many decent men who are trying to do all the right things and becoming overwhelmed and overstressed in the process.

You've recognized your problem. You to have a choice of perpetuating it or making a change. I think the key to your solution is reorganizing your priorities.

I think most men, and women too, like to be able to do everything. In the process, a lot of negative resentment develops. Often, it is directed at ourselves because of unrealistic expectations of ourselves.

Try making a list of a typical week in your life. Write is down so that it is tangilable. Include the amount of time devoted to each item. I think you'll see that you are just trying to fit to much into your life. We can abuse ourselves when we are 20 or 30 and get away with it. When we are 40 or 50 the body and the mind start saying "enough is enough".

The next part will be tough at first, but you'll be thankful later. Make some tough decisions and eliminate some items from your list. At the same time, change the amount of time that you devote to other items. How important is the women that you love?" Is she to be of primary importance in your life or just another obligation? How important is it to be relaxed and available figure in the lives of your children? Do you think that becoming president of your company will guarantee happiness or could you be content as a vice-president or general manager of some sort? Only you can evaluate these and the many other aspects of your life and only you can decide what you are going to do about then. Good Luck.

Do you have a question about dating and relating or learning to function as a single adult? Send it to the Singles Advisor co/Transcript Newspapers, 18 Pine St., P.O. Box 69, Waltham, MA 02154.

Tefila welcomes new cantor

NEWTON — Congregation Mishkan Tefila announces that Cantor Aryeh Finklestein, his wife Rachael and two daughters, have come to the synagogue family.

Finklestein hails from Israel. His father was the hazzan of Haifa Synagogue, and later of a well-known London congregation.

In England, Finklestein joined his younger brother, Meir, in accompanying their father not only during services, but also on the concert stage, television and radio.

The Finklestein family made two record albums featuring the father's original compositions titled, "The Cantor and His Sons."

Finklestein became the youngest ever professional hazzan in British history when he was appointed, while still in school, cantor of the Pollokshilds Synagogue in Glasgow, Scotland, where the family lived.

He later attended the Gateshead Yeshiva in England. Then followed a year on Kibbutzim in Israel with the B'nai Akiva Youth Movement.

While a full-time singing student at the Royal Northern College of Music in Manchester, England, Finklestein was simultaneously hazzan of the Prestwich Synagogue, Manchester.

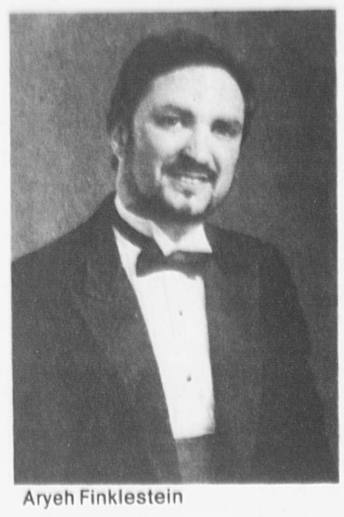

He participated in many opera and oratorio productions, and at various music festival in England.

In 1974, Finklestein conducted the Passover Services at the Great Synagoguie in Pretoria, South Africa. It was at that time that he accepted a call from Congregation Kol Emeth in Skokie, Ill.

He and his wife were married in England in the fall of 1974.

Finklestein and his brother Meir continued to perform their music locally and nationally. They also produced a record of popular Israeli melodies — composed by Meir — titled, "The Rose Of Sharon."

He was also hazzan of Beth El Synagogue in Highland Park, Ill., and A.G. Beth Israel in Chicago.

Aryeh Finklestein

Finklestein was tenor soloist, in 1982, with the Halkevi Choral Society and full symphony orchestra, or Morton Gold's Passover oratorio, Haggadah — a performance of which he is planning for the Boston community in the future.

Resident active on advisory board

NEWTON — A resident of Newton, Florence R. Rubin, has been working for the past year as a consultant for the Citizen Advisory Board to the Massachusetts Commissioner of Probation.

Rubin, instrumental in the development of the Probation Citizen Adisory Board, is the president and co-director of the National Center for Citizen Participation in the Administration of Justice, a non-profit organization whose purpose is to promote citizen involvement in the development and evaluation of administrative policy and programs in courts and correction agencies.

Established as a joint project between the Commissioner of Probation and the National Center for Citizen Participation in the Adminstration of Justice, the aim of the Citizen Advisory Board is "to increase public understanding of probation, explore innovative ideas, and make the Massachusetts Probation Service more aware of and responsive to the public's concerns about crime."

Rubin and Donald Cochran, Commissioner of Probation, recently presented a summary of their advisory board experiences at the Annual National Conference for the American Probation and Parole Association in Baltimore, Maryland. As a result, the National Institute of Corrections in Washington D.C. has expressed an interst in having Rubin train individuals from other states in the development of Probation Citizen Advisory Boards.

Chairperson of the Commission on Judicial Conduct, Rubin is also an active member of the following associations: the Massachusetts Council for Public Justice, the Massachusetts Mediation Service, and the American Arbitration Association, among others.

Rubin has been the recipient of several awards for her participation in community activities, including a day named in her honor by the City of Newton.

Local artist's work to be at gallery

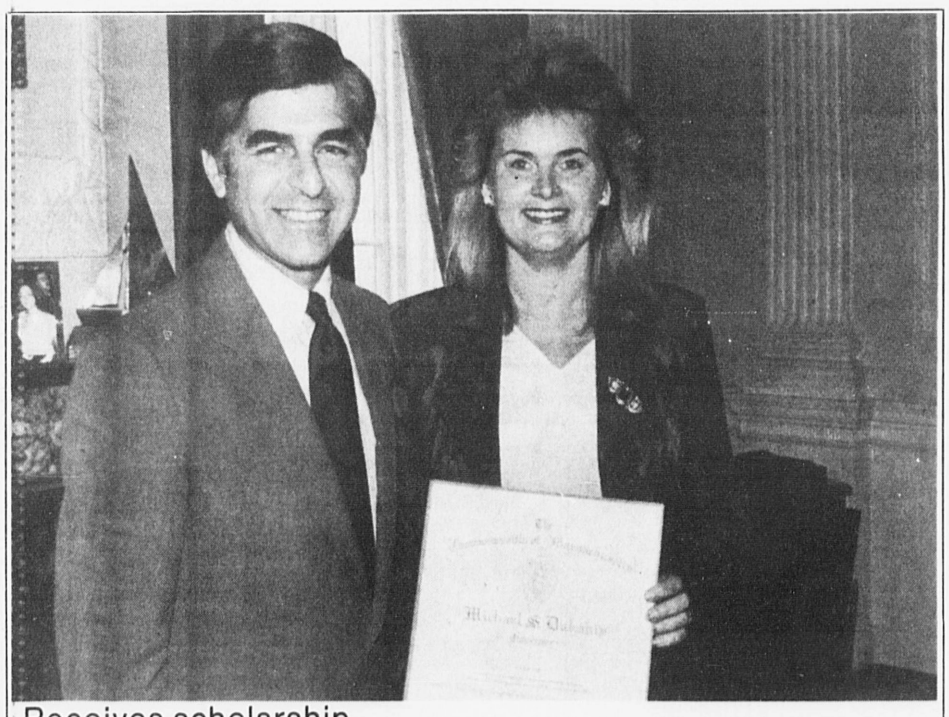

NEWTON — "Jungle Walls", a show of oil stick paintings on canvas and paper by Roberta Paul will be shown at Chapel Gallery from Sept. 4 through Sept. 28. A reception for ther artist will be held on Sunday, Sept. 14, from 3 to 6 p.m. and is open to the public.

Roberta Paul's work is colorful, bold and exotic. Her imagery is far ranging. In this show looming plants forms from the Amazon mingle with formalized architectual elements inspired by visits to the Gardner Museum and occasional human intrusions. Paul's choice of oil stick as her medium results in textured, vividly colored surfaces which emphasize the boldness and aggresive presence of her forms.

Robert Paul is a member of the Newton Artist Housing partnership which will soon be renovating the Chaflin School in Newtonville into living and working space. She currently resides in West Newton, and has a studio in Waltham and teaches at the Clearway School in West Newton.

With this show Chapel Gallery begins its fifth season as a non-profit, volunteer run, alternative space providing Boston area artists an opportunity to exhibit large scale innovative work.

Chapel Gallery is located in the former youth chapel of the Second Church, in Newton, at 60 Highland St., Weston Newton. It is one block south of Washington Street (Route 16) and three blocks east of the west Newton Exit (exit 16) of the Massachusetts Turnpike extension. Admission and parking are free. Open Thursday through Sunday 1-4 p.m., in conjunction with events at the church and by appointment. For further information call 332-7782 or 244-4039.

Receives scholarship

Superintendent of MCI, Framingham, Joyce Murphy of Newton, receives the Mass. Bradford Fellowship Scholarship from Governor Michael Dukakis for excellence in public administration, after completing a year of study at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard.

Opportunities for volunteers

Interfaith Counseling Service, West Newton, requests fundraising and poster distribution assistance. For information, please call Christina Oliver, for the former opportunity, or Dot Norcross, at 332-3856.

Newton Community Service Center is seeking volunteers for the Parent Aide Program. Volunteers are individuals from the community who provide support to parents on an individual basis. Training, supportive supervision and reimbursement are provided by the NCSC staff. Please contact Kitty Ewart or Ronnie Werner at 969-5906.

Warmlines is a volunteer, non-profit referral and information center for parents. We help parents with parenting. We are looking for volunteer office workers, social workers, program development, public relations, computers, and newsletter. Keep in contact with what's happening in your community. Use existing skills and develop new ones. Call 244-6843.

West Suburban Elder Services, Inc. is in need of persons who are willing to share their talents (music, theater, art, crafts, etc.) with senior citizens at their senior nutrition sites in Brookline, Needham, Newton, Waltham, Watertown, Wellesley, and Weston. Entertainment would be enjoyed at these sites during lunch time on Monday through Friday, lso on Saturday in Watertown, on Sunday in Needham and Waltham, and on Thursday evening in Newton. If you have a talent to share, call Karyn Nystedt or Kim Schwartz at 926-4100.

Jewish Family and Children's Service needs volunteers for a telephone information and referral service. Volunteers will help people connect with resources within the Greater Boston Jewish Community. The Jewish Community Information Service operates on Monday, Thursday and Friday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. from 31 New Chardon St., Boston. For more information, call Nancy Bloom at 566-5716.

New England Baptist Hospital is recruiting volunteers to take the book cart to all patients at the hospital. Library skills are not required, though volunteers should have the desire to reach out to others. For additional information, contact Ruth Abrams at 739-5800, ext. 5173.

Newton Free Library needs volunteers, especially typists, for the main library, the junior library and to deliver books to Newton residents who are unable to leave their homes. Call 552-7145 for more information.

Region West, Inc., a family counseling service and mental health clinic serving Newton, Wellesley, Waltham and six other suburban communities is beginning its 15th annual drive to recruit new volunteers for its highly successful Parent-Child Home Program. Frontier shows airline ticket holders can be had

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The shutdown of Frontier Airlines, stranding 17,000 travelers and leaving hundreds more with seats on future flights that may never be, shows that having an airline ticket does not necessarily mean a guaranteed flight.

"When a company files bankruptcy, travelers are pretty much left to their own devices," said Hoyte Decker, chief of the Transportation Department's consumer office. "It's going to depend almost entirely on what other carriers are willing to do on a voluntary basis."

Frontier has not gone bankrupt, but it has shut down and for travelers holding Frontier tickets the impact was much the same.

While several air carriers — United, Continental and Western — have honored Frontier tickets on standby since it halted operations last weekend, the airlines were not required to do so and acted largely out of a desire to woo customers in the hotly contested Denver market.

American Airlines, which is not as dependent on the Denver business as the other three carriers, argued that Frontier already owes it more than $1 million and refused to honor the tickets.

Government and industry sources said even if Frontier survives or is absorbed by another airline, travelers likely will have to accept future travel vouchers instead of refunds. And if the airline goes bankrupt it may be years before a ticket holder will get even a partial reimbursement since customers are far down the list of creditors in bankruptcy proceedings.

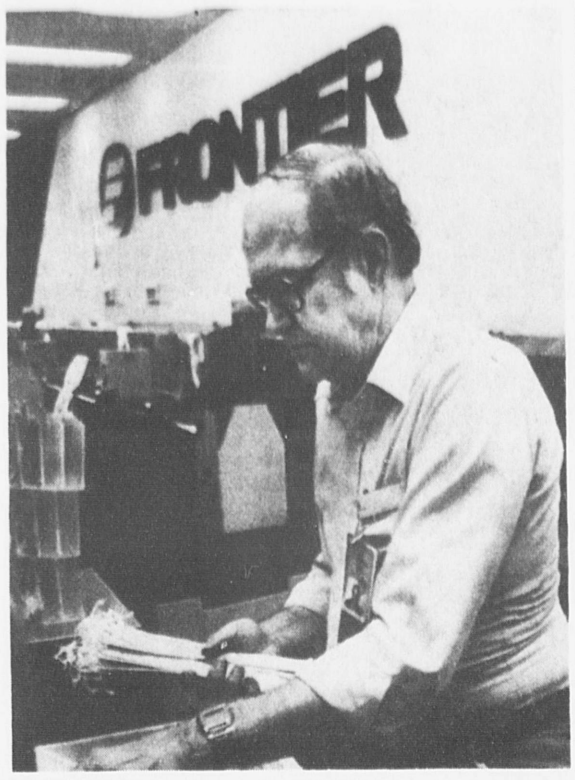

Last week, the American Society of Travel Agents called on Congress to create a $100 million revolving fund to protect air travelers against financial losses because of airline bankruptcies.

Travelers would be able to get reimbursed for tickets that were never used. The fund also would prompt competing airlines to provide alternate transportation because the airlines would be assured of full payment.

Similar proposals have been seen before but the travel agents' idea has yet to find a sponsor in Congress for legislation creating the fund, which would be financed through a 25-cent ticket surcharge.

Several Transportation Department sources said the proposal isn't even being discussed within the department.

"If this plan isn't implemented, there will be no plan at all," said Chris Witkowski, executive director of the Aviation Consumer Action Project, an advocacy group founded by consumer activist Ralph Nader. He said there's no indication the airlines want to put together a travelers' protection plan of their own.

Until a few years ago the airlines had a government-sanctioned travelers protection plan, which required that all participating airlines accept the ticket of a failed airline on a standby basis as long as the ticket was sold through a travel agent.

The system, approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board, provided help to thousands of travelers stranded after the failure of Braniff Airways in 1982. But two years later when Continental Airlines shut down only to re-emerge as a low-cost airline under bankruptcy protection, the industry's traveler protection plan fell apart.

Tax reform bill could aid the working poor

By William Kronholm
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The nation's working poor, increasingly battered by the federal tax system in recent years, are among the most significant but least heralded beneficiaries of the new tax overhaul bill.

The impact on the working poor is so dramatic and far reaching that liberals and conservatives say it is among the tax bill's most significant but least remarked upon aspects.

Tax experts say about 6 million people will be dropped from the tax rolls entirely under the tax rewrite, which awaits congressional approval. They no longer will be obliged to pay taxes because of increases in the standard deduction, the personal exemption and the earned income tax credit.

"It's probably the most important anti-poverty bill of the last 15 years," said Doug Besharov of the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative-oriented think tank. "It lifts hundreds of thousands of people above the technical poverty line. ...

"(President) Reagan has not gotten a heck of a lot of credit on this one," Besharov said, "but it's a major giveback to the working poor, and it's 100 percent consistent with his philosophy.

"It's just sort of been buried in with all this stuff on capital gains and IRAs and all," he said.

That opinion is shared, without quite the sweeping enthusiasm, by Mary Bourdette of the liberal-oriented Children's Defense Fund, who said the bill was "certainly an extremely important piece of legislation" in the fight against poverty.

But its benefits fall to the working poor, she noted, not to people who are out of work. And the money does not replace federal benefits that have been reduced or abolished by the Reagan administration, she said.

Still, the bill addresses one of the more aggravating aspects of tax policy of recent years — the growing burden on the poor as inflation brought poverty-level income into taxable brackets and tax burdens at all levels increased.

According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, a family of four in 1975 was considered poor if its income was $5,500 or less. But at least their poverty was not aggravated by taxes; income taxes didn't start until income reached $6,692.

In 1979, a two-parent family of four with poverty-level income of $7,412 paid federal tax of $134, including income and Social Security. Still, that worked out to only 1.8 percent of income, according to calculations by the Children's Defense Fund.

But the same family with 1986 poverty-level income of $11,500 will pay $1,221 in taxes — or about 10.6 percent of income.

If current law wasn't changed along the lines proposed by the pending bill, the poverty-level family of four in 1988 would be making about $12,351 and would owe income and Social Security taxes of $1,341.

Under the proposed tax rewrite, however, the same family will get an income tax refund sufficient to erase its income tax obligation and offset much of its Social Security tax. Its total federal tax burden would be about $310.

The tax bill accomplishes the changes through three mechanisms:

—The personal exemption now is $1,080 per person. But under the bill that will rise to $1,900 next year, to $1,950 in 1988 and to $2,000 in 1989. Thus, a family of four that would have exemptions totaling $4,320 under current law would have exemptions totaling $8,000 under the new one.

—The standard deduction, used by those who do not itemize, also rises. It now is $3,670 for a couple filing jointly. It will rise to $5,000 in 1988 and will be adjusted afterwards for inflation.

—The earned income tax credit is the mechanism in the tax code that gets money back to the working poor. It is a direct tax credit for poor people who work. If the credit exceeds their tax, they get it as a cash refund.

It was first enacted in 1975 to provide some relief from Social Security taxes for the working poor; at the time, most were below income tax levels. The credit's levels are geared to the numbers of a decade ago.

The earned income credit rises gradually, peaks at a maximum benefit of $550 for people with incomes between $5,000 and $6,500, then declines gradually to zero at an income of $11,000 — below today's poverty level.

Under the tax overhaul bill, however, the $550 maximum benefit will rise to $800. And the $11,000 top cutoff rises to $17,000.

Ms. Bourdette said the changes mean that about 10.2 million families will qualify for the credit in 1988, compared with the estimated 5.2 million that would have qualified under the old law.

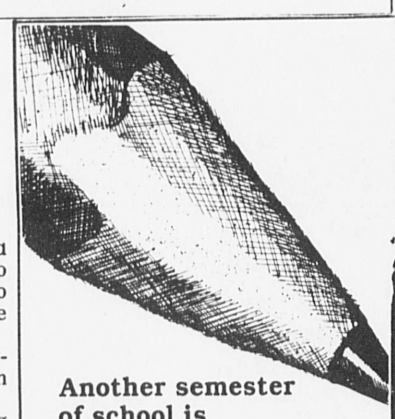

But also important, she said, is the fact that the earned income credit also would be indexed for inflation.

Texas Air confident on Eastern buyout plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Air Corp. says it remains "absolutely confident" its proposed $676 million purchase of Eastern Airlines will win federal approval, despite government rejection of the deal because of concerns about competition.

The Transportation Department, which had given the merger its tentative blessing last month, said Tuesday it would not approve the sale because it would "substantially reduce competition" in the busy Northeast air shuttle market.

The two airlines, however, were advised to submit a new proposal aimed at overcoming the department's objections about competition in the Washington-New York-Boston corridor, the busiest commercial air market in the world.

Another semester of school is underway. Whether it be high school, college or technical school, let classified be the answer to your needs.
